District Attorney Upholds His Aid

House Group Orders Buckley Record for Study Today.

United States District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett locked horns with the House District Crime sub-committee yesterday.

The District attorney charged a policeman, James W. Peters, had made a "wholly false" statement while testifying under oath before the committee and said the policeman should be brought before the Police Trial Board for punishment.

Private Peters will not be sent before the trial board unless Mr. Garnett makes a formal complaint in the form of an affidavit, as required by law, Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, acting superintendent of police, said. Mr. Garnett had not made any effort, beyond his public statement, to have Peters sent before the trial board for punishment so far as he was aware, the inspector added.

Waits Formal Complaints.

The Police Department, he added, will take no cognizance of complaints of persons involved in testimony of police before the sub-committee unless the complaints of those who feel hurt are presented formally.

Private Peters testified before the committee that Karl Kindleberger, assistant district attorney in charge at Police Court, had refused to issue formal charges against Michael Edward Buckley, jr., after the latter had threatened to expose him.

Meanwhile the crime committee drove forward with its inquiry into the functioning of the District attorney's office. It summoned Frank A. Sebrig, clerk of Police Court, to produce before it at 1:30 p. m. today the record of charges of drunkenness and disorderly conduct which Policeman Raymond C. Redifer swore he preferred against Buckley, who had been booked and released on bond as Marshall Edward Buckley last June 13.

Officials of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. also are to appear before the committee this afternoon. Ralph A. Van Orsdell, chief counsel, has told the committee he would submit proof the company has complied with every demand made by Mr. Garnett for cooperation in the drive against gamblers.

Gives Statement to Post.

The defense of the District attorney was set forth in an exclusive statement given The Post. In that statement Mr. Garnett said the statement attributed to him by afternoon newspapers earlier in the day had been made to reporters "confidentially and off the record." He had said, and his statement was published—"that gamblers were interested in discrediting" his office.

Threat of punitive action by the police trial board was voiced by the District attorney in the later statement. Policeman Peters had been summoned before the investigating committee and had said that Mr. Buckley had struck him. He said that when he sought a warrant for assault from Karl Kindleberger, assistant District attorney in charge at police court, Kindleberger had refused such a warrant after Buckley had threatened to expose Kindleberger.

Five witnesses were present in Kindleberger's office when the reported episode occurred, Garnett said. They were, he said, "Assistant United States District Attorney David A. Hart, Louis Whitestone and Matthew Cary; M. E. Buckley, the father of Edward Buckley, and Edward Buckley."

Deny Threat by Buckley.

"All of these witnesses," Mr. Garnett said, "with the exception of Officer Peters, deny that any suggestion of a threat was made by Buckley to Mr. Kindleberger at any time.

"Young Buckley was insisting that the officer had struck him first. The officer was anxious to get that charge withdrawn and to settle the controversy and announced himself entirely satisfied with a statement from young Buckley that he would withdraw the charge that he had struck first.

"Under these circumstances, the wholly false assertion of Peters before the committee that an assistant United States attorney had refused a warrant because of a threat either to his person, his character or his reputation is gratuitous and seems sufficient cause for action against him by the Police Board."

Text of Statement.

Mr. Garnett's statement follows in full:

"In answer to a question by a reporter relative to the statements made on the witness stand before the District of Columbia Committee of the House of Representatives to the effect that my assistant, Karl Kindleberger, had refused to issue a warrant because he had been threatened by Mr. Edward Buckley, I wish to state:

C. B. Calvert Killed by Car In Mt. Rainier

Descendant of Founders of Maryland Struck Crossing Street.

An automobile accident last night brought death to Charles Benedict Calvert, 60, of 1750 Corcoran street northwest, descendant of the Calverts and oLrds Baltimore who founded Maryland.

Mr. Calvert, a former corporation counsel of Mount Rainier, Md., was crossing the road at Thirty-third street and Rhode Island avenue, Mount Rainier, at about 7:15 p. m., when he was struck by an automobile. Taken to Casualty Hospital by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad, he died from internal injuries.

The driver of the car, Hyman Terish, of 5 Columbia avenue, Hyattsville, Md., was released under bond pending an inquest by Coroner Robert E. Joyce, of Mount Rainier.

Mr. Calvert was born in the old Calvert mansion at Riverdale, Md., later occupied by Senators Hiram Johnson and Thaddeus Caraway. He attended the first Central High School of Washington and the Columbia Law School, from which he graduated before the age of 20.

He practiced law in North Carolina, Washington and Maryland and became corporation counsel of Mount Rainier in 1916. During his term he prosecuted cases of fraud growing out of the installation of the community's water system.

During the World War he became assistant chief counsel to the Alien Property Custodian. Afterward he joined Leo Dunn in opening a law office in Mount Rainier, which he maintained until his death.

Mr. Calvert was the son of George H. Calvert, merchantand farmer, and Fanny Adelia Seiboldt. He married Lula Freeman, from whom he separated in 1922. Mrs. Calvert is no win California with their son and daughter.

Survivors include three brothers, Cecil and John Calvert, of Washington, and George Calvert, of Fort Worth, Tex., and a sister, Julia S. Calvert, of Washington.

Rope Weak, One Injured In Women's Jail Break

McAlester, Okla., Feb. 26 (AP).—Two women convicts failed in an attempt to escape from the State penitentiary here by sliding down a rope made of strips of blanket.

The rope broke under the weight of Rena McCollum and she suffered a fractured leg. Her cries aroused the entire ward. Fay Satterfield, her celimate, was found dressed in "outside clothing" preparing to follow Miss McCollum. Both women were serving 18 months for grand larceny.

60 Families Flee School Fire.

Detroit, Feb. 26 (AP).—Sixty families in nearby houses fled to safety today when fire destroyed Western High School. H. B. Dolan, school board superintendent of engineering, said the loss would be $1,000,000.

Snowstorms Sweep East; Plane Down

Spring Routed by Sleet; Mercury Due to Hit 18 Today in D. C.

Spring forsook Washington yesterday after a day-long rain turned to sleet at nightfall, then to a snow, that the weather man said would reach four inches.

Snow came to the entire Eastern seaboard in the same way. Blinding in its sudden bitterness, snow forced a Pittsburgh-bound Pennsylvania airliner 100 miles south of its course last night and finally compelled the plane to land at Orange, Va., after its radio failed. Five passengers and two pilots were uninjured.

A general cold spell marched across the middle of the Nation. Forecasters predicted that the temperature would fall to 18 this morning. It had reached a top of 53 at 8 a. m. yesterday. Temperatures will hover below the freezing point, 32 degrees, all day today, but the day should be clear.

Storm Signals Raised.

It rained all day and snowed at night in a region that extended northward to Maine, westward to Illinois and southward, along the mountain ranges, to Birmingham, Ala. Storm signals were raised last night along the coast from Boston, Mass., to Hatteras, N. C.

Blithely five aerial passengers—Sam S. Adams and J. Howard Marshall, of Washington; O. W. Carlton, of Salt Lake City; Paul L. Feifs, of Cleveland, and H. L. Elsner, of Detroit—left Washington just before the storm, at 6:08 p. m. They were bound for Pittsburgh.

At Harpers Ferry, W. Va., Pilot R. L. Baker and Co-pilot J. E. Tilton reported, the snow and sleet became so dense that it was impossible for them to follow normal ground directions. They turned southward in the hope of circling back to Washington, but the failure of their radio left them completely blind as to directions.

Firemen Flash Beacon.

When the pilots brought the ship close enough to earth to see the lights of a town, it was Orange. Circling the town, the plane attracted the attention of the Orange Volunteer Fire Department which quickly brought out its truck with huge searchlight and pointed the beacon skyward.

The plane landed about 2 miles south of Orange near the estate of Mrs. T. H. Somerville, internationally known sportswoman.

As a result of the forced landing, only slight damage was done to the landing gear of the ship. The passengers were brought to Orange and quarters were arranged for them in a local hotel. A few hours later they boarded a train for Washington.

Ships Speed to Aid Stricken Vessel

By the United Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—The United States Lines passenger steamer American Banker and the North German Lloyd liner Europa left courses tonight to aid an English freighter reported in distress in midatlantic.

The Radio Marine Corporation received a message from the American vessel saying she had altered her course to proceed to the aid of the S. S. Blairgowrie, drifting in mountainous seas, her hold half-filled with water.

The message said the American Banker was about 30 miles from the freighter. The stricken vessel carries a crew of 26 men, according to the radio message. It is of 3,529 tons and was built in 1924. The call for assistance, which said the vessel was "in a desperate situation," was received at 7:10 p. m. Eastern standard time.

Morgan to Auction Miniatures on Ivory

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—Offices of J. P. Morgan disclosed tonight that the financier plans to offer for sale his collection of miniatures on ivory.

The miniatures will be sold at auction at Christie's in London later in the season, it was said, the London market being the recognized center for this type of art.

The collection, consisting of about 900 miniatures dating from the sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries, was assembled by the late J. Pierpont Morgan, father of the financier.

Morgan sold about a month ago six paintings from his art collection for approximately $1,500,000, stating he was seeking to put his estate in "more manageable form."

Ruth Will Play, Hold 2 Titles On the Braves

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

Given his free and unconditional release by the New York Yankees, as the climax of a swift, dramatic series of negotiations, the 41-year-old slugger quickly came to terms on a three-year contract as player, assistant manager and second vice president of the Boston National League club.

His shift to the National League, where he will return to the town that first hailed him as a great southpaw pitcher 21 years ago, came as a startling blow to American Leaguers to whom Ruth has been an idol during his glamorous record-smashing career as a slugger.

It was revealed that two American League club owners were reluctant to give Col. Ruppert their consent to let the Babe go, even though the big fellow was entitled to his unconditional release as a ten-year man. They yielded only when it was made clear that no club in the league—except the Yankees—had any proposition to offer Ruth this season.

The deal was closed and formally announced after a final conference attended by Ruth, Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the Yankees, and Emil E. Fuchs, president of the Braves.

Although it has been hanging fire ever since last December, when the Boston club first approached Col. Ruppert, it was completed only within the past four days.

Details Undisclosed.

The detailed terms were not disclosed, but Ruth will receive a percentage of the Boston club's profits and has an option to purchase stock "at a reasonable figure." He probably will receive a flat salary of $25,000 as a player and first assistant to William B. (Bill) McKechnie, who remains as manager of the Braves for 1935, at least. All told, including a nominal salary as one of the club's officers, Fuchs declared the Babe could expect to earn more money this year than he did with the Yankees last season. Ruth's 1934 salary was $35,000.

Holding forth the prospect that Ruth eventually will realize his cherished ambition to become a full-fledged major league manager, his shift to Boston not only means a big step in the direction of his goal, but involves highly dramatic possibilities in the attempt of the Braves to offset the growing popularity of the Boston Red Sox—the team with which Ruth made his

Repeal Leads Alabama Poll In Early Vote

Holding Margin With More Than 100,000 Tallies Counted.

By the Associated Press.

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 26.—After lagging through early returns from rural boxes, repeal of prohibition in Alabama tonight moved to the fore by more than a 9,000 majority.

The vote from 872 out of 2,156 boxes in the State stood: For modification, 58,018, and against, 48,614.

The vote was closer than most modificationists had expected, as the vote in north Alabama was heavier for retention of the State's 20-year-old dry statutes than surveys had indicated it would be.

Beer and wines piled up about the same majority, the vote being 43,490 for legalization and 31,748 against, while hard liquor showed less of a lead, being 42,551 votes for and 31,832 against.

The vote included all of Montgomery County, a wet stronghold, and the majority of the vote in Mobile County, where an 8½-to-1 repeal vote was amassed.

Weather conditions, instead of holding down the rural vote in north Alabama, apparently increased it. Most of the mountain counties rolled up heavy majorities against any change in the dry statutes.

Regardless of the vote in today's primary, the present dry laws, among the most stringent in the Nation, continue in force until the Legislature reconvenes April 30, to enact enabling legislation if the vote should favor wine and beer and hard liquor.

The referendum was a plank in the platform of Gov. Bibb Graves in his campaign for the Democratic nomination last summer and was approved by the Legislature with scarcely any opposition, both wets and drys agreeing to submit the issue to the voters.

The only spectacular development of the campaign was a surprise pronouncement of the Ku Klux Klan against modification.

Georgia House Votes To Legalize Beer

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 26 (AP).—The House today voted to legalize beer, which has been sold openly in Georgia for more than a year.

The vote was 112 to 58. The bill provides for an excise tax of $2.50 on 31-gallon quantities. Funds accumulated from the tax will be used to buy school books for free distribution to Georgia children.

Many towns and cities granted local licenses for sale of beer more than a year ago, although such action was contrary to existing State law.

The bill was ordered transmitted immediately to the Senate, where it will join a liquor referendum-local option bill which was passed by the House yesterday.

Trio Sentenced to Die In Slaying of Officer

Dedham, Mass., Feb. 26 (AP).—The Millen brothers and Abraham Faber today were sentenced to die in the electric chair during the week of April 28 as the penalty for a policeman's slaying.

The Millens, Irving and Murton, and Faber were convicted last June in the robbery of the Needham Trust Co., February 2, 1934, of $15,000. Two policemen were killed by machine-gun fire. Two other killings, one in Fitchburg and one in Lynn, were attributed to the trio.

Work Deadlock Waits On Roosevelt as Probe Faces Entire New Deal

McCarran and Nye Seek Probe Embracing All Recovery Setup

Opposition to Extension of NRA Crystallized in Senators' Plan.

Opposition to further extension of NRA in its present form yesterday crystalized in demand for one impartial Senate investigation of the whole recovery set-up, combining two parallel inquiries now in the offing.

A resolution will be offered in the Senate tomorrow by Senators Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, and Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota. Appointment of a select investigating committee of Senators, to study alleged code abuses and monopoly charges, will be asked.

Senate approval of funds for a Finance Committee investigation of NRA and a Judiciary sub-committee anti-trust inquiry, meanwhile, was blocked in the Senate by McCarran. The Nye-McCarran substitute will be offered as an amendment to either the Finance or Judiciary bills and ask $15,000 to finance the study.

Fate of the Administration's NRA extension bill, now before the Finance Committee, may depend on the outcome. The Nevadan candidly expressed the conviction that a Finance Committee inquiry would return a "whitewash."

"Unless a satisfactory basis for NRA extension is laid by disinterested studies, and needed modifications are made in the present law, the Black 30-hour week measure may completely displace the NRA," he declared.

More Navy Appointees Seen for Capitol Hill

"Each Senator and Representative by next September will have one additional protege at the United States Naval Academy."

Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, yesterday predicted passage of a bill to increase from three to four the number of midshipman appointments allotted to each member of Congress. The same bill would increase the number to five each in 1936.

"This is absolutely essential," Vinson said, "unless we are going to find ourselves building ships without officers to man them. The only way to obtain suitable officer personnel in large numbers is through the Naval Academy."

It is possible that the number of congressional appointments to the United States Military Academy also will be increased at this session of Congress.

Glass Delays Action of Committee Until the President Returns.

Leaders Attempt To Compromise

By Robert C. Albright.

President Roosevelt last night held the key to the next works bill move in the Senate, but whether it would unlock another legislative field day on the McCarran prevailing wage amandment, or a substitute bill for direct relief, was for the Senate Appropriations Committee to decide.

Talk of a wage amendment compromise clashed with an unrelenting stand by labor leaders for the prevailing rate of pay, as Senate leaders allowed another day to slip by without budging the $4,880,000,000 measure from its committee shelf.

Works Development.

Developments were:

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said he would wait to hear from the President, (who returns to Washington tomorrow), before calling the group into session.

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, after conferring with legislative representatives, international labor heads and members of his executive council, said labor is ready to make no concessions in its fight for the prevailing wage amendment.

"Compromise" rumors followed a luncheon conference between Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson and three Democratic Senators who supported the McCarran amendment—Wagner, of New York; Bulkley, of Ohio; and O'Mahoney, of Wyoming. A basis for possible agreement was said to have been offered by Senator Wagner, but rejected.

Up to the President.

Secretary of Interior Ickes predicted the President's works bill will be passed ultimately without the prevailing wage amendment—a forecast followed immediately by a counterclaim from Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada. Leaving the Labor conference, McCarran insisted his amendment would be enacted.

The country continued for the most part apathetic to the fate of the work relief program if Senators' mail provided a cue. Generally, Senators who voted for the McCarran amendment received as many messages of commendation as of rebuke. One Senator said all of his "protests" were from constituents who wanted "pork."

Senator Glass, whose strong presentation of the White House case against the McCarran proposal last week carried the wage amendment within one vote of defeat, yesterday took the view that the next move is the President's.

The Virginian told newspapermen yesterday:

"It was my judgment that it would be useless to proceed with a bill the President was going to veto. I don't think anything will be done until he gets back. I am ready at any time to proceed with the bill."

Two Labor Conferences.

Labor took stock of its strength yesterday at two separate meetings, it was learned. At the first, President Green and Senator McCarran discussed procedure generally with A. F. of L. executives. Later about 100 labor legislative representatives sat in on a strategy conference.

After the session, President Green said Senator McCarran had full authority to speak for labor in any Capitol negotiations, and would carry word of labor's pat position on the prevailing wage to his Senate colleagues.

McCarran, himself, declared there was no thought of "compromise." He insisted labor has the votes to hold the prevailing wage amend-

7 Milion Men In Army, Duce Warns Enemy

By the United Press.

Rome, Feb. 26.—Premier Mussolini, who is sending 2,000 men a day to Africa, warned Abyssinia and the world tonight that Italy can mobilize between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 men in an emergency.

His brusque communique was issued as the transport Leonardo da Vinci loaded additional troops from the Peloritana division at Messina, Sicily.

The Leonardo da Vinci, delayed by bad weather at Messina, sailed for East Africa tonight with 110 officers, 1,200 infantry and artillery troops, and 300 skilled workmen. Loading of materials on the Arabia was begun at Naples. The supply ship will sail tomorrow.

British Anxious.

Information alleging that Mussolini is aiming to secure lasting political and economic advantages in Abyssinia after reinforcement of his armies in East Africa heightened anxiety in British circles here. Officials feared another severe blow at the League of Nations—but were eager not to offend Mussolini because of his collaboration in the projected general European settlement.

Mussolini said modernized military of Fascist Italy can rush 37 classes into uniform should war come, intensive recruiting is provided for in new Fascist laws involving military training for all citizens between the ages of 18 and 55.

MacCracken Begins Serving D. C. Jail Term

Ex-Official Ends Battle; Is Given Clerk's Task and 'Better Food.'

Doors of the District Jail closed yesterday afternoon upon William P. MacCracken, jr., former Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics, when he voluntarily surrendered and began serving his ten-day sentence for contempt of the Senate.

MacCracken, who, the Supreme Court recently ruled, must serve the contempt sentence which the Senate imposed for destruction of papers subpenaed by the Black Airmail Committee, entered the jail at 4 p. m. There he surrendered to Chesley W. Jurney, sergeant-at-arms of the Senate.

After being put through the usual receiving process—answering a questionnaire and being fingerprinted—MacCracken was assigned a clerical job when he expressed willingness to work. As compensation for his duties as a clerk, the prisoner will receive "better than average food" and will sleep on a cot with clean sheets.

"No Special Favors."

But MacCracken will get no other special favors, said T. M. Rives, jail superintendent. "He will not be allowed to have his meals sent in from the outside," said Rives. "He can buy pies, cakes and candy from our commissary. He will have the same privileges as 20 other short-termers doing clerical work."

MacCracken's meal last night included cold shoulder, cheese, fried pineapple, creamed potatoes, fruit jello and coffee. This was also served the other trusties, while the remainder of the jail's population

Bandit Robs Ewart's of $300; Would-Be Pursuer, 11, Checked

While between 40 or 50 diners looked on, a bandit brandishing a revolver, held up the cashier of Ewart's cafeteria, 522 Thirteenth street northwest, early last night and escaped with $300.

Just before closing time the bandit, who was reported by a waitress as having been in the cafeteria as a customer twice before during the day, appeared again.

Mrs. Florence Verdi, 1612 Monroe street northwest, was counting the day's receipts.

"Stick 'em up. This is a holdup and I mean it," the man said.

Mrs. Verdi screamed and fainted. As she slumped across her high cashier's chair the bandit swept the money from her hand and stopped long enough to scoop the rest from the till.

A. G. Ernest, 4620 Hunt place northwest, sitting nearby, sprang to his feet only to be menaced by the calm bandit, who, having stuffed the money into his pocket with his left hand, backed from the restaurant.

He disappeared into the early theater crowd on Thirteenth street. Police hurried to the scene after Ernest telephoned them.

The description of the man, as given the police by Ernest and diners, is:

No other description could be furnished by the few patrons who observed the quickly executed crime.

Eleven-year-old M. R. Bishop, jr., who was eating soup less than 15 feet from where the cashier was sitting, started to chase the bandit, but was pulled back by his father, a Charlottesville, Va., business man, who was dining with Mrs. Bishop and a party of friends.

"I was so scared," said "Junior" afterward, "that when he was gone I began to eat soup with my fork. Imagine!"

Chilean Mission Arrives.

New York, Feb. 26 (AP).—Senor Don Ernesto Barros, jr., former Chilean Minister for foreign affairs and for finance, and head of a special commission to the United States, arrived today to discuss interest settlements with the American holders of some $200,000,000 in Chilean bonds.

10-Month Enforced Job Delay Bared by Housing Unit Records

That Much Time Required for Preliminary Work Before Actual Construction, Survey Indicates; Roosevelt Considers It Program's Major Part.

By Felix Bruner.

As Congress wrangled over the work-relief bill yesterday, a survey of PWA housing division activities indicated that at least ten months would be required before any one could be put to work on a housing project which has not already been started. President Roosevelt has indicated he considers housing a major part of the program to take workers off the dole.

The ten-month estimate is based on the experience of the housing division, which during 18 months of activity has succeeded in providing homes for exactly 124 families. These homes have not been provided by Government projects, but by limited dividend corporations financed with Government money.

Only one Federal project, in Atlanta, actually is under construction and a contract has been let for a second one in the same city. Another contract, for a $5,000,000 project in Boston, was signed yesterday. All others, including a Washington project, still are in a state of preparation. It was said that action should be obtained in connection with the Washington project within a month. A similar prediction was made a year ago.

In spite of delays, however, Col. Horatio B. Hackett, head of the housing division, declared that preliminary work has progressed to the point where the Government can have $100,000,000 worth of construction under way by August 1. The only difficulty with that plan at present is that the division has only $18,000,000 available out of its original allotment of $150,000,000. Of this amount $95,000,000 has been transferred to the Emergency Relief Administration, and the remainder has been loaned or spent.

Before men can actually be taken off the dole and put to work on new housing, it was said, the following time must be spent on preliminaries: Two months making a survey to determine types of housing and needs; one month for land appraisals; two months to obtain land; three and one-half months to draw plans; one and one-half months to obtain bids and let contracts. After that it is estimated 12 months would be spent erecting the buildings.

Reilly Ridicules Jury in Plea For Hauptmann Defense Fund

Copyright by the United Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—Edward J. Reilly today staged a dress rehearsal of his campaign for "justice" for Bruno Richard Hauptmann, incidental to raising a defense fund to press an appeal from the carpenter's conviction of murdering the Lindbergh baby.

Tomorrow night he will demonstrate his oratorical powers before a sympathetic audience in Eighty-sixth street—the Wilhelmstrasse of New York—in a mass meeting which will be marked by the attendance of Hauptmann's faded blonde wife, Anna Schoeffler Hauptmann.

The defense fund, it was learned tonight, already has reached $15,000, most of it contributed from enthusiasts of Yorkville who are imbued with a strongly nationalistic German sentiment.

Today's outburst by the chief defense counsel was directed largely at the jury to which he had, in his summation, addressed far more honeyed words.

Instead of men and women "with good common sense, horse sense, David Harum sense," the jury today became dullards "with tremendous appetites" who were unable to reason together because they had eaten too much."

"One look at that jury was enough," he said. "With all due respect, when the jury went out I thought they'd be back in 15 minutes after hearing the judge's charge. We would have had no more chance if we had brought John the Baptist there as a defense witness."

Reilly described his own witnesses as "fine, decent citizens, in spite of the attempts of the attorney general to besmrich them." This was his answer to court records which showed one defense witness to have been confined "from five to eight times" in an institution for the insane, another to have been convicted of assault on a woman, a third to have been a speakeasy proprietor, a fourth a home-made liquor purveyor, a fifth a "professional witness," who changed his testimony for a fee, and a sixth a man who swore he was in St. Raymond's Cemetery when police and automobile acc[illegible]t records showed he was eight [illegible] away.

British to Press For Rome Pact, Austria Holds

Is Confident of Demand Reich Sign It Before Air Alliance Talk.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 26.—Austria's chancellor and foreign minister left for home tonight confident Great Britain would press for Germany's adherence to the Rome pact designed to guarantee Austria's independence.

While British sleuths peered and poked under their railway coaches for fear radicals had placed bombs, Egon Berger-Waldenegg, the foreign minister, said the principal purpose of Anglo-Austrian conversations here had been to "assure the independence of Austria forever—not for just some period of years."

He expressed satisfaction that the British are whole-heartedly behind the Rome accords and will demand, in forthcoming exchanges with Germany, that these must be completed simultaneously with other phases of the recent Anglo-French proposals for an inclusive European security agreement.

To the last British authorities continued their almost unprecedented precautions to guard Berger-Waldenegg and Schuschnigg against molestation or bodily harm.

Cordon of Police.

Officials examined their train from end to end before they boarded it at 4:20 p. m., and the tracks under the coaches were carefully searched for bombs. A cordon of police surrounded the Austrians as they arrived at the station and walked with them to their coach.

Although British official sources continued silent as to the date of Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon's projected visit to Berlin, which may be extended to Warsaw and Moscow, Berger-Waldenegg said he understood the secretary probably would go late next week.

Sir John will inform the Germans, the Austrian minister said, that the Reich must sign the Rome noninterference pact for central Europe before her former enemies will admit her to an air alliance, grant her arms equality and repeal the military clauses of the Versailles Treaty, all of which are contemplated in the Anglo-French proposals.

"The chief reason we came to London," Berger-Waldenegg said, "was to discuss the Rome accords. We have every assurance that Britain considers no other point in the Franco-British proposals * * * of greater importance."

No Exchange With Reich.

Denying reports that Schuschnigg had warned Germany to "stop the Anschluss talk," the foreign minister said there had been no exchanges with Germany and could be none "until the Rome accords have been completed."

"After this is done," he explained, there may be further mutual agreements between Austria and separate neighboring countries. This, of course, means that we might then talk with Germany. * * *

"We are going away entirely satisfied with Great Britain's attitude. She desires permanent establishment of peace in central Europe as strongly as we do."

To support Berger-Waldenegg's assertion that "discussion of the Rome proposals occupied nearly all our time in London" was Chancellor Schuschnigg's denial, issued just before his departure, that the question of restoration of the Hapsburgs had been discussed.

"Journalists like to speak sometimes of the restoration in Austria," he said. "We have pointed out that our main concern lies quite in another direction. One restoration of greater importace to us is the restoration of our economic situation."

Defending his government against the charge that it has dealt too harshly with revolting Socialists in Austria, Schuschnigg revealed that 23 death sentences have been carried out in Austria as an aftermath of last year's political disorders. More than 2,000 persons are under sentence or awaiting trial, he said, while 2,179 more are held by police authorities.

Between You and Me

Roosevelt and Weakening Public Faith; Logan Bill Shelved; Fan Mail Figures.

—By Raymond Clapper—

DISPATCHES from Hyde Park report President Roosevelt as being indifferent to suggestions that he go on the radio to arouse the country in behalf of the works bill.

Whether the temporary White House merely is being coy about this and waiting to be sufficiently urged or whether Mr. Roosevelt actually believes it would be unwise to attempt mass pressure tactics on Congress is unclear at this distance.

He could do worse than take the public into his confidence in a direct address to mark the second anniversary of his inauguration in a message to the country next Sunday night.

* * * *

To some around the ringside at Washington it begins to appear as if President Roosevelt is facing exactly the same task that confronted him two years ago almost to the day.

That task is the restoration of confidence—revival of faith on the part of the country both in himself and in itself.

When Mr. Roosevelt stepped forward on the east front of the Capitol just two years ago, the raw, cloudy sky reflected the discouragement of the American people. Despair was written on millions of faces. Their banks had closed. Only a few months before blood had been spilled in the bonus riots a few hundred yards down Pennsylvania avenue. No one knew but that that incident might be only a prologue to what was to come. America had lost confidence in itself.

And there was none too much confidence in Mr. Roosevelt, either. Thousands in the inaugural crowd wished that Alfred E. Smith might have been taking the oath of office that day. Mr. Roosevelt's campaign had been one of glittering and hopeful generalities. Opponents had derided him as a pleasant man who wished to be President. His four years in Albany had not impressed the country with many great decisive strokes that mark a man of destiny. He had refused to cooperate with the dying Hoover Administration during the interregnum.

* * * *

Then in 24 hours the whole picture changed. His ringing inaugural was followed the next night by action. For months thereafter a steady outpouring of recovery measures revived confidence. Despite intermittent criticism, it is fair to say that the mass of people continued to have faith that the New Deal was the answer to their prayers.

This situation is changing. Money was poured out by the billion. The public debt was kited to unprecedented heights. That was all right for a while. But the number of unemployed remains as large as ever. Relief rolls are just as long. Business statistics look good on paper but the forecasts are not too encouraging. Export trade is worse than ever. The Housing Administration has failed to fulfill earlier hopes. New proposals, such as the Rayburn-Wheeler bill to abolish utility holding companies, have stirred new apprehension in business quarters. The disillusionment of thousands of ordinary citizens is being registered in the tremendous followings which have gathered around Huey Long, Townsend and vendors of other patent medicine. And on top of all this comes the breakdown in Congress.

* * * *

Mr. Roosevelt's leadership, by all customary tests, is weakening and the conviction is growing that maybe the New Deal, after all, will not save the country. That is the danger in the situation—the revival of despair. The Hoover deflationary policies failed. Eagerly the country turned with restored hope to the Roosevelt policies. The country was patient but confident in the end that Roosevelt would bring recovery.

That confidence has not disappeared, but it is weakening. Mr. Roosevelt may be able to restore it. It is vital that he do so. If he does not, then what is left? It is when thoughful persons begin to ponder the answer to that question that the heart sinks. European countries which have faced the same question generally have found but one answer—fascist dictatorship under one guise or another, or communist dictatorship. But dictatorship. Self-government was surrendered.

* * * *

Numerous faults in Mr. Roosevelt have been pointed out, but few dispute that his peculiar ability to stir the courage and confidence of the country came into play at a supremely opportune moment two years ago. There's another chance now if the old magic touch is still there.

* * * *

While the Senate was killing time yesterday it might have considered instead of passing over Senate Bill 213 by Logan, of Kentucky. This bill would prevent officers and members of any national committee or officers of any political party from practicing for fees before any Government agency. This aimed at the political lawyers on whom President Roosevelt frowned so sharply a year ago.

The Senate Judiciary Committee reported the bill favorably a few days ago, observing that the purpose of the bill was to prevent improper use of political influence. When the bill came up on the calendar yesterday it was put over for future consideration. Roosevelt is for it. The American Bar Association is for it. Somebody is blocking it.

* * * *

Enthusiasm got the better of someone at Hyde Park, resulting in dispatches in yesterday newspapers to the effect that thousands, or as one conservative journal put it, "many thousands" of telegrams and letters had reached the White House in Washington backing up the President on his works bill controversy with the Senate.

There weren't thousands. Actually the works bill fan mail amounted to only a fraction of the 4,000 letters a day received regularly at the White House. A good guess would be 300 at the most. Senators continue unimpressed by their fan and pan mail on the subject.

* * * *

If we are going to decide on legislation by fan mail, the Literary Digest people have a highly developed Nation-wide poll routine already worked out. It has a high percentage record in performance. There's an idea for another PWA project in that.

Knew Zaharoff Well, Says Mrs. Gould, Suing Her In-Laws.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—The mystery man of Europe, Sir Basil Zaharoff—whose name bobs up in munitions making, European political intrigues and general goings-on along the Riviera—was brought into an American family court squabble today.

Mrs. Wilma E. Gould, 40, who is suing members of her husband's family for $500,000 damages for allegedly conspiring to compromise her to obtain divorce evidence, testified she knew Sir Basil well at Monte Carlo.

The divorce proceedings were dropped when the husband, Edward B. Gould, was confined to an upstate sanitarium.

In 1926, Mrs. Gould said, her husband left her in Paris, returning to New York.

"Where did you go then?" asked Leon M. Prince, defense counsel.

"I went to Monte Carlo."

"Did you know Sir Basil Zaharoff, the mystery man of Monte Carlo?"

Mrs. Gould, who speaks with a mixture of deep South and British accents, appeared a bit indignant.

"You mean," she asked, "the mystery man of the world?"

"Did you know him intimately no matter what he's the mystery man of?" the lawyer persisted.

"Yes, I did."

The witness said she had dined with Sir Basil and other noted persons—"including David Lloyd George"—at Monte Carlo.

Mrs. Gould alleges her husband's family and a detective agency conspired to "frame" her and hired Harry Gerguson—the one-time pants presser from Hillsboro, Ill., who rode high for a time in society posing as Prince Michael Romanoff—to compromise her.

The bogus prince sat throughout today's session, immaculately dressed and yawning profusely.

Ministry Totters on Issue of School Strike Now Involving 300,000.

By the Associated Press.

Havana, Feb. 26.—Two more of President Carlos Mendieta's right-hand men quit the cabinet today, and tonight sources close to the government expressed the belief the ministry was breaking up among the rocks of Cuba's island-wide school strike.

The two who resigned—Cosme de la Torriente, secretary of state, and Raul de Cardenas, secretary of interior and justice—did so ostensibly because they did not approve Mendieta's plans for general elections this year.

Other quarters, however, said they stepped out because they favored stronger tactics in dealing with the school strike, participants in which estimate it has involved more than 300,000 persons.

Suggestions Rejected.

Mendieta, these sources said, declined to approve the secretaries' suggestions, even though leaders of the movement have openly announced it is designed to overthrow the Mendieta government.

Jose Capote Diaz, secretary of education, and Rafael Santos Jimenez, secretary of commerce, quit last week.

To replace Torriente and Cardenas, President Mendieta designated Jose A. Barnet and Miguel A. Riva. The cabinet quickly approved them. Barnet was undersecretary of state in the administration of former President Ramon Grau San Martin.

The Havana urgency court acted energetically on the accusations of police that Communists were backing the school strike.

Editors Imprisoned.

If sentenced, Jose Valdes Rodriguez, Juan Marinello, Jose Chelala and three other members of the staff of the magazine Masas (Masses), reputed organ of the radical Anti-Imperialist League, to six months in prison for publishing "seditious matter."

A riot in the courtroom during the passing of the sentence was averted when several hundred persons gathered there joined in shouting "This is open fascism." Soldiers threw cartridges into their rifles, quieting the crowd.

Army Air Squadron Is Winging East

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Rockwell Field, Calif., Feb. 26.—Ten Army bombing planes left here today on the first leg of a cross-country trip to Washington, where they will start a mass formation flight to the Panama Canal Zone.

Capt. Harold Smith, Air Corps, in charge of the fliers, said he hoped to reach Kelly Field, Tex., tonight, continuing on to Maxwell Field, Ala., tomorrow. From there the pilots will fly to Langley Field, Va., where the planes will be conditioned for the long trip to Panama.

Present plans call for the take-off from Bolling Field, in Washington, on or about March 1. One stop will be made at Miami for fuel, the planes then proceeding across the Caribbean Sea. The personnel of the flight consists of 15 officers and 16 enlisted men of the Thirty-first Bombardment Squadron.

State Recovery Bill Proposed in Arizona

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 26 (AP).—A "Baby NRA," following provisions of the Administration's national program, was introduced in the Arizona House of Representatives today in the form of a "State recovery act."

Under its provisions the State would have power to regulate industry and trades in a manner similar to that of the NRA. The Governor would be empowered to approve codes of fair competition.

McKenzie in Photograph.

In its issue of yesterday morning The Post published a photograph purporting to show George J. Sheppard being taken by detectives to a preliminary hearing on charges of using the mails to defraud. The photo, which was received from the Associated Press, did not identify the other two men shown in the picture. J. Chase McKenzie has called The Post's attention to the fact that one of the men in the picture was himself and has pointed out that he is an attorney, not a detective.

Repeal 'Victim' Asks For Cut in Alimony

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—Declaring repeal of prohibition had reduced him to "dire circumstances," Jack Colt, former "speakeasy" owner, asked the court today to reduce his alimony payments from $60 to $5 a week. Colt, who admitted he formerly lived in a penthouse apartment and drove an expensive automobile, said "those days are gone forever."

His wife, Mrs. Anna Colt, opposed the application, asserting she and her child were in danger of being dispossessed from their home.

7 Million Men Ready, Il Duce Warns Africans

vision destined for East Africa are occurring in perfect order," Il Duce said.

Defense Strengthened.

"This is being done in order to strengthen rapidly the defense of our two colonies, Eritrea and Somaliland.

"The Givinana division (headquarters in Florence) will be concentrated in Naples in the next few days.

"Recruiting of other classes preceding 1911 is excluded, excepting contingents of officers and skilled men, should they be necssary, and excepting in the event of European complications, which seems remote at present following the recent agreements in Rome and London and also because of further greater developments which may result from them and which harmonize with the aims of Italian policy.

"At any rate, before any development, let it be remembered, because of new Fascist laws extending obligatory military service to all between 18 and 55, Italy now is capable of mobilizing 37 classes, with a total of 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 men.

"The class of 1914 will be called to arms at its regular time, namely, April 1.

"Thousands of applications from volunteers continue to arrive daily at the war ministry. Due account is being kept of them.

"Two new divisions will be called—the Givinana and the Peloritana. The second already has been constituted. (It is on the way to Africa.)

"All material which departs (for Africa) is being reintegrated by simultaneous orders to the national industry."

The communique answered threats of Abyssinia to mobilize 1,000,000 men in event of war, over frontier disputes on the Italian Somaliland-Abyssinian border, in which scores have been killed on both sides in the last six months.

In the World War, Italy mobilized only 5,615,00 men. The United States had 4,355,000 men under arms, while others of the major powers involved were: Russia, the largest, 12,000,000 men; France, 8,410,000; British Empire, 8,904,000; while on the central powers' side, Germany had 11,000,000 men armed; Austro-Hungary, 7,800,000; Turkey, 2,850,000, and Bulgaria, 1,200,000 men.

New Roman Road For Lybia Coast

Tripoli, North Africa, Feb. 26 (U.P.).—Italy today ordered a broad motor highway built along the entire Lybian coastline, linking Tunis and Egypt across Italian territory.

This new Roman road will be nearly 1,200 miles long. Of this, nearly half already has been built in stretches of varying lengths at various times since the colony was occupied by Italy in the last century.

Construction of the remaining stretches will be started at once, under orders given Gov. Italo Balbo of Lybia by Premier Mussolini. The completed road is to be inaugurated by Il Duce April 21, 1936, when he is scheduled to make his second visit to Lybia.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt Back.

New York, Feb. 26 (AP).—Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt returned to New York today after a six weeks' cruise to Guatemala and Panama. Met at the pier by her son, Kermit, she went directly to the Roosevelt home in Oyster Bay. Roosevelt said his mother was in good health.

'Shadow Sales' Laid to Mellon In Tax Hearing

Financier Aided Banks for Own Interests, Jackson Seeks to Show.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 26.—The Government led the confidential secretary of Andrew W. Mellon today through masses of figures and books, seeking to show that while heading the Treasury the financier aided certain western Pennsylvania banks during the 1932 crisis "for his own interests."

Howard M. Johnson, the witness, also was forced to put into the records testimony that in 1933 Mellon was selling stocks through him as agent to a brokerage house, establishing an income tax deduction, and repurchasing the same stock the same day for the Mellon family's Coalesced Co.

This transaction, asserted Robert H. Jackson, counsel for the Internal Revenue Bureau, was similar to numerous other alleged "shadow sales" by Mellon in 1931 on which the Government based its $3,089,000 additional assessment that now is being heard by the Tax Appeal Board.

Hogan Objects.

Arguing against an objection by Frank J. Hogan, Mellon's counsel, to delve further into activities of the Melbank Surety Co., organized by Mellon and his brother, R. B. Mellon, Jackson asserted:

"Why, if your honor please, this has everything in the world to do with it (the case). Here is the Coalesced Corporation, in which they (the brothers) would have, or did have no interest but domination. Here is its subsidiary, the Smithfield Securities, interested in the bank stocks formerly owned by A. W. Mellon. Here is the Melbank (corporation) operating those banks. And who comes to the aid of those institutions? A. W. Mellon and R. B. Mellon personally, showing as we have contended at all times, the direct interest of these gentlemen in these securities, just exactly as though they never had been transferred."

Continuing, Jackson said Hogan had placed it on record that borrowings were made to protect certain banks and he charged the statement was not "accurate." It was "borrowed to protect their own interests," he said.

"I am trying to show there was no money paid for anything except where it protected the interest of Melbank and precluded liability to assessment in case of failures."

Organized in 1931.

Melbank Surety Co. was organized and financed in January, 1931. A. W. Mellon personally put $165,000 grade "A" bonds into a joint account already kept with R. B. Mellon, Johnson said, and this account used the bonds and other securities to set up a $5,000,000 concern.

The witness said the Surety company furnished bonds to guarantee deposits of small banks—particularly those of public funds—at a time the banks were unable to get such protection elsewhere.

Johnson, under close questioning, said he knew of no bonding by the company of any other than Melbank members. There are 28 banks directed by Melbank, whose stock is held by the estate of R. B. Mellon and the coalesced company jointly.

"Some of the banks unable to take advantage of this bonding arrangement failed, too, didn't they?" asked Jackson.

"There were bank failures in the district, yes," replied the witness.

Johnson also said A. W. and R. B. Mellon had borrowed $600,000 from the surety company.

$61,000 Loss Shown.

On December 28, 1933, Johnson said Mellon told him to sell about $250,000 in stocks and bonds of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Interborough Rapid Transit and Aluminum (British) Co., which showed a loss of approximately $61,000. This was deducted from Mellon's 1933 income, Johnson said.

On the same day and from the same brokerage house, Johnson also testified he had repurchased the same block of stock for the Coalesced Co. He said he had been instructed at a special meeting of Coalesced's executive committee to acquire the securities.

Johnson testified earlier that after reorganization of Coalesced in 1931, A. W. Mellon had taken no hand in the management of the concern, into which he put $68,000,000 in 1931 and since has added, through gifts to his children, approximately $50,000,000 more. Paul Mellon and his sister Ailsa are sole owners of Coalesced's 200,000 shares of common stock. A. W. Mellon holds all of its $20,000,000 preferred stock.

Cadet 'Mathletes' Seek Competition

By the Associated Press.

West Point's "mathletes"—a word coined by the cadets—are ready to meet those of any educational institution in a mathematical contest.

The challenge has been posted with Congress by Maj. Gen. William D. Connor, superintendent of the Military Academy, who initiated a mathematical contest with Harvard in 1933 which the cadets won. Gen. Connor said it created as much enthusiasm at "The Point" as Army's winning an annual football classic from the Navy. He is endeavoring to arrange another "math" contest with Harvard this year.

Liquor Licenses Will Be Curtailed

A policy of restricting the number of licenses issued for the sale of liquor in restaurants and taverns was declared yesterday by the Liquor Control Board by its chairman, George W. Offutt.

The board will not set a limit on the number issued, but will use its discretionary powers to limit the number of licenses in a given area. This year there have been 398 licenses issued of this type. Last year a total of 350 was granted.

In his announcement, Mr. Offutt said there are enough licenses now outstanding to supply the demands of the District.

Panama's Plea For Gold Stirs Dilemma Here

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Obviously embarrassed by demands of the Republic of Panama that this country pay in gold the annual rental for the land on which the Panama Canal is located, the Administration yesterday was studying the situation to determine how the Panamanians may be satisfied without giving them an advantage denied to American citizens.

In a treaty signed in 1904 this country agreed to pay Panama $10,000,000 in "gold coin of the United States" and starting nine years later also to make an annual payment of $250,000 in "like gold coin." The agreement is in perpetuity. From 1913 until last year the $250,000 was paid by check to the Panamanian fiscal agent in New York without objection.

But in February, 1934, the Panamanian representatives refused to accept a check for $250,000, contending that since the gold dollar had been devalued to 59.04 per cent they should be paid either gold coin of the former value or its equivalent in the new currency, which would be $422,500.

Latest Check Refused.

The Treasury yesterday forwarded another check for $250,000 to the Panamanian fiscal agents, but Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro, Panama Minister here, served notice on the State Deparment that this payment also would be returned as insufficient. Meanwhile, nothing has been done about the payment returned a year ago.

In some quarters the failure of the United States to pay the Panama annuity in "like gold coin" is regarded as a default on the debt and a breach of the treaty. The Diplomatic Corps here has had an amusing time digging up frequent statement by this Government reminding Japan particularly that "treaties can lawfully be modified or terminated only by processes prescribed or recognized or agreed upon by the parties to them."

All of this has caused chagrin to the State Department, where Acting Secretary of State William Phillips yesterday declined to discuss the merits of the Panamanian claim at his press conference.

"Bound by Legislation."

He said the Administration was simply carrying out what it is bound to do under legislation, which includes the gold-clause abrogation resolution.

Dr. Alfaro called at the department to inquire, Mr. Phillips said, whether the recent Supreme Court decision holding invalid the abrogation of the gold clause in Government obligations would not permit the United States to make payment of the annuity in gold.

Mr. Phillips said this was a matter which was receiving careful study at the Justice and Treasury Departments. "Apparently the Administration would like to pay Panama in gold coin or its equivalent, but to do so would give the Panamanians an advantage denied to American holders of Treasury bonds under the Supreme Court ruling. This is the dilemma which the New Deal legal minds are seeking to avoid.

Child Law Success Doubted This Year

Sponsors' Hopes Wane for 12 Needed Ratifiers.

By the Associated Press.

Hope for ratification of the child labor amendment this year by all of the required 36 States virtually has been abandoned by some of its chief sponsors.

"I don't think it will be possible to get ratifications in 12 more States this winter," Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, head of the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department, said yesterday.

"I think that within a few weeks we will have some sort of a conference to determine what steps should be taken next. We want to keep up enthusiasm."

Wyoming, Idaho, Utah and Indiana ratified the amendment this winter. Rejections were voted by Kansas, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Mexico, Tennessee and Texas.

Legislatures of 13 States which have not passed on the measure are in session. These States are: Alabama, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky (special session), Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, South Carolina, Rhode Island and South Dakota.

Glass Soon to Call Banking Hearings

Eccles, Economists and Teachers to Be Quizzed.

By the Associated Press.

With the relief bill cast aside, Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, yesterday busied himself with preparation for hearings on the New Deal bill to centralize more control of the Nation's currency and credit in the Federal Reserve Board.

The Virginian said hearings would be started probably in a week or 10 days by his Banking Subcommittee.

A list of witnesses on that section extending the Reserve Board's authority, he said, would include Mariner S. Eccles, governor of the board, and other members, bankers, economists, and teachers of banking.

Chairman Leo T. Crowley of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the curency, also will be called.

Before beginning hearings on the bill the committee may take up the nomination of Eccles as governor of the board, Glass said.

Bonus Demand 'Unfortunate,' Grace Declares

Sees No Connection Between Veterans' Request and Lush War Profits.

By the Associated Press.

Eugene G. Grace, steelmaker whose war-time bonuses amounted to $3,669,000, yesterday told the Senate Munitions Committee he felt organized demands by veterans for the bonus were "unfortunate."

Without expressing his opinion as to the justice of the appeals for bonus payments, the president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation declared:

"It is unfortunate to have a demand by organized forces for the bonus. It is unfortunate to have such a situation."

Nye then said he had been informed by Frank Belgrano, commander of the American Legion, that veterans demanded the bonus because of war-time profits and wages in industry.

"Never Thought of It."

"I have never thought of it in that connection," Grace said.

Earlier, he told the committee that in two of the three war years his bonus and salary amounted to $2,798,000, upon which $1,810,000 in Federal taxes were paid.

Grace defended the bonus system of his company and said it had been an "incentive" to greater efficiency.

He refused to concede that the war-time profits of Bethlehem Steel were "exorbitant," but said that in the event of another conflict he felt there would be less difficulty in relations between Government and industry.

"I agree profits should not be exorbitant," he said, "I should say there will not be a repetition of the situation in the World War."

Fraud Charge Recorded.

Grace listened with a frown while Senator Bone (Demcorat), Washington, read into the record charges of fraud carried in a Government brief in a suit, filed several years ago, by the United States Shipping Board against the Bethlehem company. The case grew out of shipbuilding contracts.

The witness said the allegations were "unfair," but made little other comment. The brief, on file in the East Pennsylvania Federal District Court, also asserted that "what is needed is an object lesson which will serve to check the cupidity of those who may hereafter have occasion to deal with the Government."

At the conclusion of the day's hearing, Grace left for New York, still maintaining care to avert any possibility of kidnaping such as was said to have been plotted by men under arrest in Bethlehem.

'Trust' Is Denied By Republic Steel

Merged Capacity Would Be Small, U. S. Told.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Feb. 26.—The Republic Steel Corporation filed a general denial in Federal Court today to the Department of Justice suit which charges that Republic's plan to acquire the Corrigan-McKinney and Truscon steel companies would violate the Clayton anti-trust act.

The Department of Justice suit seeks a permanent injunction against the transaction. A hearing is scheduled for March 18.

Republic's answer said that its ingot capacity is only 7.2 per cent of the total of the industry and Corrigan-McKinney's only 1.5 per cent.

"The proposed purchase of the assets of Corrigan by Republic," the answer said, "is not based on any purpose to eliminate or lessen competition or merely to create a larger unit in the steel industry, but rests on sound business considerations."

Post Waits Good Weather.

Los Angeles, Feb. 26 (AP).—Wiley Post, noted 'round-the-world flier, marked time today, awaiting favorable weather conditions and minor adjustments to his famous plane, the Winnie Mae, before setting a date for his proposed stratosphere dash to New York City.

Underwood & Underwood.

With thumb in vest, Grace registers nonchalance despite heavy barrage of questions asked by committee members regarding profits made by him and the Bethlehem Corporation during World War.

Fight for Social Plan Agency Presages New Post in Cabinet

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Opponents of Federal competition with private business yesterday leveled a bombardment at a revised plan for Government sale of annuities.

The difference arose as the House Ways and Means Committee received from the Treasury Department a suggested substitute for a section of the Wagner-Lewis social security bill dealing with monthly old-age benefits for persons able to pay their own way during their productive years.

Committee action in reaffirming its belief that the social security program should be administered by an independent agency, the Social Insurance Board, rather than under the supervision of the Labor Department, was generally regarded as presaging eventual creation of an additional Cabinet post.

The potential new Federal department, which is not likely to be authorized by this session of Congress, would absorb other welfare work now handled by various Federal agencies. President Roosevelt has discussed such a Cabinet enlargement at conferences with congressional advisers.

Secretary Perkins was among those who led the unsuccessful movement to have the Labor Department take charge of the economic security program. The committee, however, agreed the undertaking should be directed by a separate establishment because of the vast amount of money and work involved.

One of the chief objections raised in the committee to Federal sale of annuities was that once the principle was written into law it might be extended to the point where the Government would deal in all classes of annuities and life insurance and would take business away from privately financed firms because the country's credit would be behind the project.

Another protest was that the principal of the annuities purchased from the Federal Government would be exempt from State taxation while no such privilege would be enjoyed by holders of pensions obtained through transactions with private firms.

Friends of the program insisted there would be no competition with private business because the voluntary annuities would be sold to persons who otherwise would fail to provide for their declining years.

A vote on the issue remains to be taken.

The Treasury also proposed that the limit of the voluntary annuities be fixed at payments of $150 a month after '65, but the committee retained the original figure of $100.

Another Treasury proposal would permit the Government to use for Federal refinancing purposes the money paid in by participants in the voluntary plan. Government securities would replace the cash. The suggestion would, if approved, curtail the total of short-term borrowing from bankers by Uncle Sam.

U. S. Ships 1,168,796 Tons of Iron to Japan

The United States shipped 1,168,796 tons of scrap iron and steel to Japan last year, the Commerce Department announced yesterday. This represented 68 per cent of a total exportation of 1,835,554 tons.

Nearly all the scrap sent to Japan, it was stated, was destined for melting in the furnaces of the Japanese steel industry for the making of finished steel products.

The shipment of scrap iron and steel during the year was only 10,000 tons less than the combined foreign shipments during 1928, 1929 and 1933.

Colorado Declines To Rebuke Costigan

By the Associated Press.

Denver, Feb. 26.—Gov. Ed C. Johnson, who for many months has waged bitter political war with Colorado's senior senator, Edward P. Costigan, lost in the State Senate today an effort to have Costigan reproved for voting for the McCarran amendment to the Administration's relief bill.

The Senate, by a large vote, tabled the resolution sponsored by the Governor after Senator Costigan declared the Governor has projected himself "into a national situation about which he knows nothing."

Parley Urged To End Breach On Bonus Bills

Van Zandt Invites Belgrano to D. C. Conference; Deplores Delay.

Efforts to conciliate the differences between supporters of the conflicting Patman and Vinson bonus bills were initiated yesterday by the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

James E. Van Zandt, national commander in chief of the overseas group, now here, telegraphed Frank N. Belgrano, American Legion national commander, in Indianapolis and suggested a Washington peace conference of the leaders of the veterans, Representatives Patman (Democrat), Texas, and Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky.

The status of bonus legislation in the House has been confused for weeks because of Legion agitation in behalf of the Vinson measure and insistance on the Patman plan by the V. F. W.

"I am confident," Van Zandt wired Belgrano, "we could sit down in a spirit of comradeship and reach an agreement that would insure the prompt enactment of a bill for the immediate cash payment of the adjusted service certificates, as mandated by both our national conventions."

Van Zandt added he would not oppose the Vinson measure if it would not lead the way to additional national debt.

"Almost two months have elapsed since Congress convened," Van Zandt informed Belgrano, and each passing day increases the hardship and distress of our comrades who look to leaders of veterans organizations for early action on this legislation.

"That is why I urge you to cancel all engagements as I will do and come to Washington for this important conference in the best interests of all veterans of the World War."

Fisher Body Vetoes Closed Shop Pact

Threatens to Curb Activity if 'Agitation' Persists.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Feb. 26.—The Fisher Body Corporation today refused to sign a working agreement with Federal Labor Union No. 18614. The agreement had been viewed by the union as a pattern for the automotive industry.

In a statement issued by E. F. Fisher, general manager of all Fisher Body divisions of General Motors, the company stated that "no agreement has been or will be at any time signed by the company tending toward a closed shop."

The agreement called for a 30-hour week, minimum wages, minimum hourly rates, collective bargaining, and rules for seniority layoffs.

Senate to Study Geneva Arms Pact

Foreign Relations Group Will Meet Today.

By the Associated Press.

Chairman Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, yesterday arranged for a meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee today to reconsider the 1925 Geneva arms treaty.

This pact was ratified by the Senate last session, but was recalled when several signatories refused to agree to a reservation sponsored by Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, declaring American adherence should not be interpreted as interfering in any way with whatever sovereignty Persia had over the Persian Gulf.

This area is one of the few specified in the treaty to which signatories would agree not to ship arms under any circumstances.

The treaty aims to prevent the shipment of arms into any country without specific consent of the government of such a country, and to give publicity to munitions shipments.

U. S. Trade Pact With Belgium Waits Signing

Action, Expected Hourly, May Provide Acid Test of Program.

Believed by many observers to constitute the acid test of the Administration's reciprocal trade program, an agreement of this kind between Belgium and the United States is expected to be signed momentarily, it was revealed yesterday.

For a time it was expected the pact would be signed yesterday, but when night came the measure in its final form had not received the approval of all the technicians examining it. Agreement had been reached on all points, however, it was asserted, although the pact is said not to go as far as originally contemplated.

The Belgian trade agreement is regarded of great importance because it will be the first pact negotiated with an industrial nation. Consequently, in an effort to obtain trade concessions for American exports, it has been necessary for this Government to agree to lower tariffs on some products from Belgium.

Details Veiled.

Details of the agreement have been kept secret but it is reported the United States has agreed to concessions on building materials, such as iron and steel manufactures, cement and glass, from Belgium. It also is reported a concession has been given on lace. In return Belgium has agreed to lift barriers against American agricultural products and some manufactured commodities, such as automobiles.

Protective tariff advocates are expected to denounce any lowering of tariff rates on industrial products coming into competition with domestic products. Thus the Belgian agreement may be made an issue before Congress.

Several weeks ago, when this Government agreed to lower the tariff on manganese in return for a variety of concessions by Brazil on American manufactured products, there were sharp protests from the manganese industry and from many high-tariff lobbyists, even though the domestic production is comparatively negligible and in normal times does not require more than several hundred workers.

Previous Duties.

Prior to the World War, Belgium was relatively free of tariff or other trade restrictions. The ratio of duties to the value of imports was 1.47 per cent in 1913 and 1.7 per cent in 1920. In 1931 the ratio had increased to 5.9 per cent; to 9.94 per cent in 1932, and to 10.35 per cent in 1933.

The ad valorem equivalent of duties on dutiable goods, which was 8.8 per cent in 1913 and 8.4 per cent in 1921, rose to 11 per cent in 1928; 14 per cent in 1931; and is estimated to have amounted to about 20 per cent in 1932 and 1933.

Moley Makes A Sudden Trip To Hyde Park

Officials Won't Say Whether He Came to Confer on Works Stalemate.

By Leon Dure, Jr.
A Staff Correspondent.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Feb. 26.—An unannounced visit by Prof. Raymond Moley, former chief of the Brain Trust, broke the routine of President Roosevelt's schedule today.

The one-time Assistant Secretary of State, who now edits the Vincent Astor magazine Today, arrived here in time for luncheon with the President and remained most of the afternoon.

Neither Prof. Moley nor White House headquarters would divulge the nature of the visit, but it was presumed they discussed the Administration's general situation, including the controversial $4,880,000,000 works bill.

But for the accidental discovery of the professor in the lobby of a Poughkeepsie hotel, his visit to Hyde Park might have passed unnoticed, since earlier in the day Assistant Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre had announced there would be no callers.

Silent on Works.

Whether there was any connection between the Moley conference and the stalemate in the Senate over the works bill could not be ascertained. But it is this subject that now looms largest among the problems besetting the President.

Meantime, there was a tendency among those close to Mr. Roosevelt to tone down reports circulated here yesterday that he is receiving a heavy response from the public on his stand against "prevailing wages" in the works program.

It had been stated that a steady stream of messages and telegrams was piling up at the White House in Washington, most of them in support of the President. This is not unusual, since Mr. Roosevelt's huge mail grows by leaps when any controversial subject is under discussion.

Shuns Controversy.

That the White House does not want to be drawn into any controversy on the scope of the reaction, however, was clearly indicated when officials here declined to comment for publication. Privately, they said he is receiving many messages, both here and in Washington, but that some of the reports that went out from here may have been exaggerated.

Accompanying Prof. Moley to the President's home was Gen. Charles Sherrill, former ambassador to Turkey, who is writing a book concerning Mr. Roosevelt. They conferred with the President in his high-ceilinged library until time to catch a late train.

As Mr. Roosevelt again took things easy, it began to appear that his forthcoming message on shipping will be delayed another day or two. Originally, he planned to transmit this message to Congress before leaving tomorrow night for Washington.

Fairbanks and Group To Start Yacht Tour

By the Associated Press.

St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Feb. 26.—A cheering crowd was at the docks late today to greet Douglas Fairbanks and his companions, including Sylvia Lady Ashley, as they arrived aboard the Europa to start their world yachting tour.

The group went aboard the yacht Caroline, which anchored in the harbor at daybreak. It was expected Fairbanks and his guests would sail tomorrow afternoon.

Connecticut Society To Fete Cummingses

In honor of Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings and the members of Congress from Connecticut, the Connecticut State Society is giving a reception and ball tonight in the Willard Hotel. A feature of the entertainment is to be a short recital by Mme. Malda Fani, Italian operatic soprano.

Mme. Fani will be accompanied by Kathryn Hill Rawls in the following numbers: Aria from "Le Nozze di Figaro" (Mozart), "Se tu m'ami" (Pergolesi), "Menuet" and Bergere Legere" (Weckerlin), "Un bel di'" from "Madame Butterfly" (Puccini), "Cloches" (Debussy), "Because" (d'Hardelot), and "Ay! Ay! Ay!" (Ponce).

NATURE STOPS COLDS

When You Lend a Helping Hand

Plenty of fresh air is nature's way of curbing a cold. But it is certainly reasonable that you can not breathe in fresh air when your nostrils are clogged.

The way to help nature rid you of that cold is to open up wide the air passages. Ephedrinated Vapex Nose Drops will do it—instantly. You can feel them penetrate to the innermost passages and clear them so that fresh, cooling, healing air can soothe the cold-inflamed membranes.

But be sure you use Ephedrinated Vapex Nose Drops. They are different from any other cold remedy ever made. They contain Vapex, that famous war time discovery for colds, and ephedrine which is prescribed by doctors in the treatment of colds.

Get a bottle of Ephedrinated Vapex Nose Drops now from your druggist or department store—and keep that cold from getting a real start.

Works Deadlock Continues; Probe Faces Entire New Deal

ment in any works bill which might be passed.

Abandonment for the time being of the Administration's ambitious works project, and substitution of a direct relief bill of approximately $1,880,000,000, is being urged on leaders by a few conservative Senators, who believe direct relief for the present should be separated from the public works issue. In the forefront of this group are Senators Alva B. Adams, of Colorado, and Harry Flood Byrd, of Virginia, and they are said to have the backing of Chairman Glass, of the Appropriations Committee.

Doom of Works Feared.

The Administration is understood to take the position, however, that such a move would spell the doom of work relief, and of the elaborate plans laid out to place Federal aid on a job basis. Leaders also are afraid the prevailing wage issue may have to be thrashed out all over again, even on a $1,880,000,000 measure. Senator McCarran has threatened to press his amendment on any bill appropriating more than $880,000,000 for direct relief.

Most Senators who are backing McCarran on his labor amendment, however, have no desire to kill the $4,880,000,000 works bill, and some few of them, Progressives, would like to increase the amount. But they insist on the wage amendment, which the Administration contends would boost the cost of the program out of all reason. They also insist on a clearer statement of what will be done with the money.

Leaders effected a strategical adjournment over today, providing an opportunity to confer on procedure, and hoping that return of the President may do something to clear the atmosphere, now hopelessly confused.

There was doubt last night that Progressives would initiate action tomorrow to discharge the Appropriations Committee from command of the bill. This group reconsidered their course when Senate parliamentarians disclosed that such a move would kill the prevailing wage amendment. Authorities on Senate rules explained that all Senate changes in the bill were wiped from the measure automatically when it was sent back to committee. The President's own bill, as it passed the House, would be brought before the Senate if the committee is discharged, parliamentarians insisted.

"Personally, I am not willing to have the bill die because of one amendment," Senator Borah commented.

"A great many of those in favor of the McCarran amendment want the bill brought back to the Senate floor."

cently approved the 30-hour week bill. Their report will be laid before the full Judiciary Committee next Monday.

A thorough-going revision of codes is in prospect when and if the recovery act is extended, it was said last night. Labor and consumer groups alike were girding for a new presentation of their respective cases, in any renewal of codes that may follow June 16 expiration of the present act.

Efforts to tie the Wagner labor disputes bill into the New Deal recovery picture were made yesterday by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor. He held a late afternoon conference with Secretary of Labor Perkins on the measure. Later he said he had "hopes" that Miss Perkins and the Administration will support the bill.

Plan for Extension.

Possibility of attaching NRA extension to a new tax measure now brewing below surface in the House Ways and Means Committee was discussed as one possibility. There has been a divergence of opinion among leaders over whether the House or the Senate should act first on NRA legislation, but prevailing opinion has been that the Senate, where NRA studies already have been launched, should take the initiative.

Meanwhile, a survey covering the first 18 months of operations of the recovery act, made by the NRA research and planning division, showed that profits of 290 major industrial concerns totaled only $100,000,000 in 1932, as compared with $430,500,000 in 1934.

Average hours per week in all manufacturing industries had been reduced to 35.7 in December, while earnings per hour averaged 55.2 cents, the report showed. Per capita weekly wages were increased from $16.68 in January, 1933 to $19.73 last December, the report stated.

Average Hourly Wages.

"While post-code average hourly wage rates exceed precode by roughly 30 per cent, the particular industries in which the rise has been greatest have been those where the rates were formerly the lowest," the board said. "Other evidence indicates that in respect to hourly wage rates the primary beneficiaries of the NRA codes were laborers in the low-pay occupations in low-pay industries, in low-pay areas, especially female labor in the South."

At the same time, it was warned that averages do not represent the situation of all laborers. It was pointed out that while the laborer in the low income bracket may have benefited, the laborer in the higher brackets may have suffered.

With a total of 721 codes and supplements, 680 code amendments have been approved, the report said. At the same time, the report showed, there have been 614 general stays of or temporary exemptions from individual code provisions, and 1,171 individual concerns have been given exemptions from specific code provisions.

Liberty League In College Field

Student Groups Set Up in Five Universities.

The Liberty League is entering the Nation's universities. A college division has been created, the league announced yesterday, and recognition has been granted to "affiliated undergraduate groups" at Northwestern, Yale, Princeton, and the universities of Nebraska and Wisconsin.

In addition, the league said, requests for such recognition have been received from University of Maryland, Western Reserve, Sioux Falls College, Occidental College, University of Delaware, University of Chicago, Bethany College, Union College, Bowdoin, Westminster College, College of the Ozarks, University of Virginia, Springfield College and the University of Pennsylvania.

Among objectives of the students are:

"To investigate the mechanics of modern government to determine that which is sound.

"To sponsor intelligence and sanity in government and to defend the constitutional rights of American citizens."

Machine Needs Seen Offering Millions Jobs

'Pent-up Demand' for New Equipment Is Cited in Survey.

By the United Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—It would take 4,000,000 workmen two years to produce the $18,574,000,000 demand for machinery pent up during the depression since 1929, the Machinery and Allied Products Institute announced today on conclusion of a Nation-wide survey.

The institute, meeting here, said the survey upholds the conviction recovery lies in reemployment in the realm of capital goods industries. The survey brought out the following points:

1. A pent-up demand for machinery, accumulated during the depression years since 1929, amounting to an indicated total of $18,574,000,000.

2. Prospective pay roll to labor employed in the manufacture of these machinery requirements amounting to approximately $12,073,600,000.

3. A prospective total of 20,123,000,000 man-hours of labor in producing the machinery.

4. Potential employment for two years of a force equal to 4,000,000 workmen—more than four times the present number of workmen in the machinery industries.

The machinery industry itself is not equipped to handle this huge demand in the time set forth. The industry in 1929 employed 1,100,000 workers. "Naturally," the survey said, "it would be a physical impossibility for them to expand their facilities to employ the 4,000,000 workers needed to meet machinery requirements over a two-year period"

Hence the institute warned manufacturers to enter the market at once for their plant equipment requirements for rehabilitation.

From one-fourth to one-half of the machinery now installed in American plants, the survey said, is out-dated, greatly depreciated or obsolete. To replace it would require nearly four times the amount of money sought by the President for work relief.

The survey also disclosed the overwhelming bulk of the machinery and equipment that produced more than $70,000,000,000 worth of goods of every description alone in 1929 is still in place, and asserted attempts to manufacture goods with this out-dated equipment are costing American consumers dearly in higher production costs and selling prices.

Woman Coughs Up Bullet, Lodged 5 Years

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 26.—Five years ago Mrs. Ross Wyncoop was accidentally shot in the arm. A physician probed for the bullet, but couldn't find it. It never troubled Mrs. Wyncoop, who forgot about it until last night at the supper table when she was seized with a violent coughing spell. Up came the bullet.

Wed Unwittingly, Bride Wins Suit For Annulment

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 26.—Alleging in her complaint that she was married without her own knowledge and that the wedding was concocted by a relative to avenge a grudge, Mrs. Federico Tarasi, Harrisburg, Pa., was today granted an annulment by the local court.

Mrs. Tarasi alleges she was induced to drink at an Italian wedding feast in December, 1928, at Harrisburg and that she became almost totally incapacitated. While in that condition, she alleged, she was induced to take a ride for the purpose of getting "air" and that her husband accompanied her. She recalled only that they drove for some distance and that she regained her senses while in a restaurant. It was not until some time after she returned home that she was informed of her marriage. She alleged upon learning of the wedding she refused to associate with her husband.

She further alleges that at the time of her marriage she was 21 years old and that her husband, Lewis A. Tarasi, was only 15 or 16.

A PRESENTATION OF THE WASHINGTON POST

20 Associates of Clyde and Bonny Sentenced by Texas Judge.

By the Associated Press.

Dallas, Tex., Feb. 26.—The Government completed tonight a Texas roundup of Barrow gangsters and associates that left at large only one of a mob that bullets and bars have brushed off the byways of crime.

Not even the mothers of the slain Clyde Barrow and his cigar-puffing companion, Bonnie Parker, were spared as Federal Judge William H. Atwell sentenced 20 relatives and friends accused of aiding the pair.

Hiding somewhere was Raymond Hamilton, former Barrow lieutenant and now the Southwest's most widely-sought gunman. He is believed to have been wounded in a clash with officers Sunday night near McKinney, Tex.

But the dapper young crime chief's mother, Mrs. Steve Davis, his brother, Floyd, and others were among those sentenced after a jury had convicted 15 persons in addition to 5 who pleaded guilty.

Leniency Granted.

Leniency was shown all three of the mothers. Mrs. Emma Parker, mother of Bonnie, was given 30 days in jail. Mrs. Cumie Barrow, called the "ringleader of the conspiracy" by the prosecution, was permitted to fix her own sentence. She set 30 days.

Sentences ranged from an hour to two years—the maximum. All were charged with conspiring to protect Barrow and his gun-girl while the two were sought in a chase ended when they were shot down by possemen on a Louisiana highway last May.

Mrs. Parker did not take the stand during the trial, which started February 22.

Mrs. Barrow testified simply:

"He was my boy. I loved him."

Plead 'Mother Love.'

Their plea was "mother love." Attorneys argued no mother could have withheld protection from Clyde and Bonnie, despite their bloody crimes, under the circumstances.

"What do you think would be about right for you?" Judge Atwell asked Mrs. Barrow.

"Well, I am in bad health, judge, and have already been in jail about 30 days. I think 30 more days would be about right."

The stiffest sentence was given Floyd Hamilton. He was sent to Leavenworth Federal Penitentiary for two years.

He was captured three weeks ago in Shreveport, La., after he and Raymond narrowly escaped death in a Dallas police trap. Raymond also was named in the harboring conspiracy indictment.

15 Months for Methvin.

Henry Methvin, gangster associate of Barrow and Bonnie, received 15 months.

Others sentenced included:

Mrs. Steve Davis, mother of Raymond Hamilton, 30 days.

Mary O'Dare, one-time sweetheart of Raymond Hamilton, a year and a day in Alderson Prison. She pleaded guilty.

Blanche Barrow, widow of Buck Barrow, a year and a day on her plea of guilty. Buck, Clyde's brother, was wounded fatally by officers in Iowa about two years ago.

S. J. Whatley, a Barrow gangster, a year and a day in Leavenworth.

L. C. Barrow, younger brother of Clyde, 13 months in Leavenworth.

Steve Davis, Raymond Hamilton's stepfather, 90 days.

Hilton Bybee, another Barrow gangster, 90 days.

Joe Francis, another to plead guilty, 60 days. He was a brother-in-law of Clyde Barrow.

W. D. Jones, associate of Clyde and Bonnie, two years.

John Basden, former grocery store truck driver from Grand Prairie who joined the Darrow gang, year and a day in Leavenworth.

Neophyte in Hospital, Mother Assails Frat

By the Associated Press.

Iowa City, Iowa, Feb. 26.—Kenneth Runner, jr., of Iowa City, a pledge of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity, was reported in a serious condition in the University Hospital today, suffering from a lung hemorrhage, physicians said.

Prof. Kenneth Runner, of the university geology department, said, however, that his son's condition was not directly attributable to probation rigors.

It was learned authoritatively that it was the boy's mother who wrote President Eugene Gilmore, of the university, charging that her son and other pledges of the fraternity received abusive treatment during probation.

Kelly Is Named In Chicago Vote Of Democrats

World's Fair Mayor Wins Right to Seek Second Term in Drab Fight.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—Edward J. Kelly, World's Fair Mayor of Chicago, was formally nominated by the Democratic Party today to seek another term as chief executive of the Nation's second city.

His overwhelming nomination was conceded long before some 400,000 persons—less than one-third of the 1,485,204 registered voters and one of the smallest turnouts recorded in a recent municipal primary here—had trudged to the polls through a driving snowstorm.

The only question remaining in his followers' minds was the exact number of votes he had received in what they termed "an expression of confidence." The powerful Democratic organization was certain the Kelly vote broke all party primary records and exceeded the 234,158 cast for the late Anton J. Cermak at the primary four years ago. Many precinct officials reported Democrats had outvoted Republicans four to one.

Officials delved into the stacks of ballots to determine Kelly's Republican opponent in the April election. None of the three G. O. P. candidates—Mortimer B. Flynn, portly coal merchant; Emil Wetten, attorney and former worker for William Hale Thompson, and Mrs. Grace Gray, a business woman—enjoyed the active support of the party in a campaign that was remarkable only because of the lack of public interest.

The little popular attention manifested was directed to the Republican mayoral race, the battles for nomination as city clerk and city treasurer on that ticket and the aldermanic contests.

No major violence was reported in any ward.

Gulesian, Back, Declares Song Cured Amnesia

Ex-Millionaire Says Tune by Wife Was Played in N. Y. Mission.

By the Associated Press.

Newton, Mass., Feb. 26.—Moses H. Gulesian, 71-year-old former Armenian immigrant who became a millionaire only to lose his fortune, was resting tonight at his palatial Newton home after a week's absence which he attributed to amnesia.

His memory returned, he said, as he listened to a tune composed by his wife, played at his request in the Bowery Mission in New York yesterday.

His wife, Mrs. Grace W. Gulesian, gave the following account of her husband's disappearance and return:

"He had been walking a great deal, but I can't find out how he got to New York. He drifted into the mission. A young woman was playing the piano and there was some singing. He had some copies on the song in his pocket, which he had shown at a meeting at the University Club in Boston which he attended just before he disappeared.

"He took one out and said to the young woman, 'Would you be willing to play this song? It is written by some one I dearly love.'

"The young woman played it and read the words and after that he began to get back his mind.

"He said, 'I want to go home. I am sick. I want to telephone.'

"A young man in the mission went with him on a street car to the railroad station, and we met him when he arrived. This is the the way he told it to me."

Mrs. Gulesian said that yesterday she received a letter demanding $15,000 ransom for the release of her husband. The letter was postmarked in Brockton. Federal officials forwarded it to the Department of Justice at Washington. They said the letter appeared to have been written by a woman.

Gulesian received his first shelter in this country in the Bowery Mission when he arrived 52 years ago as an immigrant. He prospered in real estate and theatrical ventures and until a few years ago was considered extremely wealthy. More recently, he has said, his fortune disappeared and business worries overwhelmed him.

Half-Clad Man Reading 2 Books in Rain Seized

By the United Press.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 26.—A policeman took Sam Stein, international labor defense organizer, into custody today when Stein was found walking in the rain, garbed only in a pair of trousers, an undershirt and one shoe, and trying to digest the contents of two books.

"When I read, I forget everything," Stein said. "I was reading two books and I guess I got a little befuddled." He was released.

Long Convenes His Legislature In Baton Rouge

Square Dealers Rally as Lawmakers Answer Surprise Call.

By the Associated Press.

Baton Rouge, La., Feb. 26.—Senator Huey P. Long assembled his Louisiana Legislature in special session tonight for a general expansion of his already far-reaching "dictatorial" powers.

At the order of Long and under the portective guns of more than 100 State militiamen the lawmakers assembled in the capitol on short notice and made ready to grind through the legislative mills whatever bills or resolutions, their chief desires at 10 p. m.

Sudden dsclosure late in the day that the session was being convened to consider anything that might be submitted by O. K. Allen, Long's chief lieutenant, fell like a bombshell on Louisiana.

Long said that the session might be for only a day, no new laws passed and none repealed, indicating that the only business for the legislators would be to ratify his agreement for rebate on the oil refiners' tax with the Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana or any other single day's business.

Interest immediately attached itself to State headquarters of the Square Deal Association here, which bristled with activity as the scope of the Governor's official call was made public.

The Square Dealers, pledged by their platform to fight for repeal of Long's so-called dictatorial laws, have organized a State-wide movement against Long's administration which on one occasion flared into open revolt with a group of armed citizens clashing with State troopers at the Baton Rouge airport.

Square Deal leaders gathered at the association's headquarters here shortly after Gov. Allen issued his 23-item legislative call, and began a study of its provisions. The organization is headed by Ernest J. Bourgeois, an unemployed engineer.

The call was so drafted as to give Long full leeway in enacting any legislation he deems necessary to expand his "dictatorship."

Most important among the items enumerated in the call were the following:

To authorize suspension of laws with reference to licenses and taxations.

To authorize trade agreements between the State and private corporations with reference to the development of natural resources.

To revise the corporation franchise taxes and to provide for the allocation and disposition of such taxes.

To enact, amend or repeal revenue raising laws.

To enact legislation affecting the State police power.

To enact laws relative to public utilities.

To enact laws defining public service concerns and public utilities and prescribing the powers of the State Public Service Commission over the same.

To provide for the exercise of local option in the parishes and municipalities relative to intoxicating liquors.

To confer additional powers on the Louisiana Public Service Commission.

Farley Ignores Long's Investigation Moves

By the Associated Press.

To all outward appearances oblivious that Huey P. Long exists, Postmaster General Farley, as bald and smiling as ever, yesterday showed a decided disinclination to discuss investigations.

Farley returned from New York Monday evening. It was indicated at his office that he would have no comment on Secretary Ickes' assertion yesterday that he would send the Senate all the data he had about the Postmaster General in a "day or two."

Ickes rounded up the Farley material in response to Long's resolution that it be furnished the Senate. The Louisiana Senator charged that building firms in which Farley was interested had had more than their share of business from the Administration.

Asked how much data would be sent, Ickes quoted an anecdote to the effect that "a man's legs should be long enough to reach the ground."

Charges Cause Garnett Clash With Probers

House Body Orders Court to Produce Buckley Record Today.

Police Court and Peters occurred in the presence of five witnesses besides Mr. Kindleberger and Officer Peters. Those witneses were Assistant United States Attorneys David A. Hart, Louis Whitestone and Matthew Cary; M. E. Buckley, the father of Edward Buckley, and Edward Buckley. There was no occasion for Mr. Kindleberger to issue a warrant, for the man was there. No warrant was asked for. The district attorney's office had no jurisdiction over the drunk and disorderly charge. This was wholly under the jurisdiction of the corporation counsel.

"All of these witnesses, with the exception of Officer Peters, deny that any suggestion of a threat was made by Buckley to Mr. Kindleberger at any time. Young Buckley was insisting that the officer had struck him first. The officer was anxious to get that charge withdrawn and to settle the controversy and announced himself entirely satisfied with a statement from young Buckley that he would withdraw the charge that he had struck first.

"Under these circumstances, the wholly false assertion of Peters before the committee that an assistant United States attorney had refused a warrant because of a threat either to his person, his character or his reputation is gratuitous and seems sufficient cause for action against him by the Police Board."

Referring to the headlines in the afternoon papers, Mr. Garnett said, "I told some of the reporters of the afternoon papers confidentially and off the record of reports that had come to me that lead me to believe that the gamblers were interested in discrediting this office. Our record in indicting 51 on charges of bookmaking and violating the gaming laws of the District, including certain of the so-called 'big shots,' and in convicting 11, and in having withdrawn 331 phones from their use for these purposes, lent color to these reports. I was investigating these reports to determine their credibility and to my surprise this story broke in the afternoon press."

Randolph Keeps Mum.

Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the sub-committee, refused to comment on the Garnett statement, as did other members of the committee and John R. Fitzpatrick, committee counsel. The committee's views will be set forth in its report to the House, Randolph said.

Randolph disclosed the fact he had called on Mr. Garnett to supply the committee with information about pending gambling cases. Testifying before the committee Garnett said many gambling cases had been pending for months. The committee asked for a report on each case, giving the date of indictment, the date fixed for trial and other information.

Informal discussion among members of the committee developed the likelihood that one of the committee's recommendations would be legislation prohibiting assistant district attorneys and assistant corporation counsel from engaging in private practice while on the Government pay roll. This grew out of testimony given by Mr. Kindleberger, which disclosed to committee members the widely-known and accepted practice for years in the District for these officials to engage in private cases which are not within their jurisdiction.

and spaghetti, bacon, bread and tea. He slept in a third-floor dormitory with 70 other trusties.

Most of the former Assistant Secretary's cmopanions are men who have been sentenced for intoxication, disorderly conduct or like offenses. He may spend his leisure time reading or playing cards with them. Rives told reporters that the jail boasts of several bridge players.

Surrenders by Phone First.

Jurney made the announcement of MacCracken's surrender. "He telephoned me at 3 o'clock that he wanted to surrender, Jurney said.

"He said he would meet me at the jail at 3:45 p. m., but he lost his way and did not arrive at the jail until 4 o'clock, when he surrendered and entered the jail."

Jurney made public the following statement by MacCracken:

"After careful consideration I have concluded not to petition the Supreme Court for a rehearing of my case, and in accordance with the stipulation I entered into with the sergeant at arms of the Senate, I am surrendering to serve my sentence. This I do conscious of the fact that I have done no wrongful act.

"In this connection I desire to explain my position in connection with this controversy. Since 1929 I have been practicing law in Washington. Last February the Senate Air Mail Committee issued a subpena calling on me to deliver to that committee all correspondence and other documents in my possession relating to air-mail contracts.

Insists He Is Innocent.

"My understanding of the legal and moral duty of a lawyer to his clients was and is that he can not disclose their communications to him, written or oral, without their consent. I immediately made available to the Senate committee every document in my possession excepting those which I believed could not be released without the consent of my clients, and at the committee's request I at once asked their instruction.

"As fast as my clients consented to the production before the Senate committee of their communications to me I instantly made them available. Before I heard from all of my clients the Senate issued a warrant for my arrest for not delivering over my clients' papers. Before the service of the warrant all of my clients had waived their privilege and all papers then in my possession were delivered to the sergeant at arms of the Senate.

"There has been a great deal in the public press about the destruction of papers in this case. The only papers involved in this controversy that were destroyed were those delivered by my partner without my prior knowledge or consent to a representative of one of our clients, and those my partner believed were of a personal nature and not covered by the subpena. There was not one scintilla of evidence before the Senate that in any way connected me personally with the destruction of any papers whatsoever. I can not make this too strong.

"Nothing Else to Do."

"The papers that were removed from my office with my consent were, after my request, all turned over to the Senate committee, before the contempt proceedings were instituted. The clients involved in this latter transaction were cited for contempt and asquitted by the Senate.

"After the Senate's citation to show cause why I should not be punished for contempt was served upon me and they had adopted rules for the trial which made that body grand jury, prosecutor, trial jury and judge, I concluded that the Senate under these circumstances in attempting to try and punish a private citizen was violating the Constitution of the United States. I took the case to the courts to test the jurisdiction of the Senate.

"The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia sustained me in this view. The Supreme Court held adversely to my contention. In sustaining the power of the Senate the court declined to consider the facts, other than to ascertain whether the charges made by the Senate were within its jurisdiction. In effect, the Supreme Court holds that if the Senate is engaged in a legislative matter and charges a private citizen with an act which, if proven, would constitute an obstruction to the exercise of that function, then the question of guilt or innocence of the party charged and the punishment to be inflicted are questions solely for the determination of the legislative body, notwithstanding the fact that it is a political as contra-distinguished from a judicial body.

"I believe that some situation will arise in the future which will cause the court to modify this holding. However, as far as I am concerned, nothing remains but to accept the punishment which the Senate inflicted. This I propose to do."

Records Bare 10-Month Delay In Housing Jobs

That Much Time Required for Preliminary Work Before Construction.

May 1, 1936, before any workmen actually would be employed on new housing projects. The projects already under way would not be financed under the works bill, but from funds already allotted, but at present loaned to the Relief Administration.

To Ask Broader Powers.

Secretary Ickes said yesterday that broader powers would be asked of Congress for obtaining housing sites. At present there is pending an appeal from a decision by a Kentucky district court that the Government can not condemn property for housing. Ickes also indicated that part of the difficulty was due to the fact that at the beginning the housing division was not functioning properly.

The three housing projects which have been completed, or completed to the extent that they are partially occupied are at Philadelphia, Euclid, Ohio, and Altavista, Va. For these projects the Government loaned private corporations $10,971,000.

In the year and a half of its existence the housing division spent $2,500,000 on Federal projects, signed contracts totaling $8,500,000 and approved 37 slum clearance projects which when, and if, built, will cost $121,500,000.

3,000,000 Jobs Opened Up.

At the same time Ickes announced that 3,000,000 direct construction site jobs were opened up by the PWA between July 1, 1933, and December 31, 1934. These figures were based on a report of the United States Employment Service. Most of the men employed, it was said, were unskilled laborers. Some of the jobs have lasted for a number of months, while others lasted only a few days, it was said.

It was estimated that an average of 500,000 men were at work on construction sites through 1934. It was stated that indirect employment connected with provision and transportation of materials exceeded that actually on construction sites.

The Pennsylvania Railroad announced yesterday that wages paid and orders placed during 1934 under its electrification and improvement program financed by PWA totaled $56,910,000. Of this sum, wages paid directly by the railroad amounted to $10,194,000, and the remainder was spent for materials and equipment, a large part of this sum also going into wages.

Tax Exemption Vote Approved

West Virginia House Acts for Referendum on Property Levy.

By the Associated Press.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 26.—A proposal to give the voters a chance to say whether they want to grant $2,500 property tax exemption to the head of every family was approved by the House of Delegates today.

The resolution, proposing a vote on a constitutional amendment, was passed, 69 to 23, and sent to the Senate after Delegate Joe Gentry, Cabell County Democrat, had won a long fight for it.

The House then proceeded to move speedily through a mass of bills. The Senate, too, with the end of its regular session only 12 days away, passed many measures, sending most of them to the House for action.

The constitutional amendment proposal had been defeated once in the House while Gentry was absent. The next day he bitterly denounced the action and fought to have it reconsidered. The delegates turned thumbs down and Gentry introduced another resolution carrying the same provisions.

The proposed amendment would be submitted to the people in a general election in November, 1936. If adopted, it would guarantee to the head of every family the privilege of owning $2,500 worth of property free of all taxation.

Attorney Says Witness 'to Blast Quadrangle Case Out of Court'

Both Sides Promise New Evidence to Prove or Disprove Trading of Wives; Two Men and Girl Dance Called to Testify.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Feb. 26.—New evidence to prove or disprove that two socially prominent couples informally traded wives at a beach party was promised tonight by attorneys for both sides.

The action involves a divorce suit filed by Walter W. Emerson, handsome actor-writer, naming Barton Sewell, wealthy sportsman, as corespondent; the counter-complaint of Mrs. Jane Scholz Emerson, Denver and Beverly Hills socialite, naming Mrs. Leah Clampitt Sewell as her husband's corespondent; the $100,000 suit for alienation brought by Mrs. Sewell, prominent in social circles here, against Mrs. Emerson.

Three new witnesses in court today, awaiting call to the stand, were:

1. A mysterious man identified only as "Mr. Alvarado." Milton M. Cohen, attorney for Emerson refused to discuss the purport of his testimony beyond saying "I'm going to dynamite this case right out of court with him."

2. Everett (Red) Davis, special investigator from the district attorney's office. Davis was present at the beach party.

3. Miss Suzette Tobey, sad-eyed dancer, said to have been a former dancing partner of Emerson during his days on the stage. Reference was made to a $50,000 balm case. Mrs. Emerson's attorneys produced three checks, totaling, he said, $6,250, and asked Emerson, "Weren't these paid to attorneys and other people to settle a seduction case?"

Emerson, cheeks red and eyes flashing, cried "Those were for complete and final settlement of a nuisance case brought against me in 1923."

His attorneys protested against reference to the checks, and the old action, on numerous grounds. Nevertheless, Miss Tobey has been ordered to remain in court.

$100 Auto Theft Gets Man 4 Years

Resident of Harrisonburg Denies Stealing Car.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., Feb. 26. Welty Ammon, 30, of McGaheysville, was given a four-year penitentiary sentence in Rockingham Circuit Court today for the theft of an automobile valued at $100. The jury deliberated a half-hour.

This is the longest term ever given here for a similar offense. Ammon denied he stole the machine, although admitting he was with an unnamed person who took the car. There was considerable argument as to the value of the automobile, the defense maintaining it was worth only $35 and thus Ammon should be charged only with petty larceny.

Cecil McCarthy, colored, Grottoes, was given two years for the theft of 14 chickens, valued at $14. Yesterday U. S. Taylor, was given two years for stealing 15 turkeys, and G. S. Lonas received two years for giving a "bad check" for $55 in payment for 18 hogs.

Four Workers Die In Mine Cave-in

Uniontown, Pa., Feb. 26 (AP).—Buried under a cave-in of tons of rock and slate, four men died today in the Oliver Mine of the Pleasant Valley Coal Co. and four others were injured, two seriously.

Out of a work-gang of 11 men called to clear away the wreckage of a half-dozen mine cars which had been derailed, only three escaped death or injury in the cave-in. The dead were John Suraytor, sr., 50; his son, John Suraytor, jr., 22; Pete Christine, 40, and Charles Jaynes, 30.

Survivors said the slide occurred without the usual crackling in the mine roof. Rescuers dug out the injured men after a half-hour's work.

Long Terms Given Two Jail-Breakers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 26.—Two of three men arrested in Newport News several days ago after their escape from Montross Jail were given prison sentences totaling 29 years in the Westmoreland County Circuit Court today.

Elmer Johson was sentenced to seven years on one house-breaking count, six months on another and 12 months for the jail-break. James Jenkins was given seven and six years, respectively, on two house-breaking counts and 12 months for escaping jail.

A third man, James Mothershead, was not tried. He may be turned over to Federal authorities to serve a suspended 18-year sentence officers said was given him some time ago. Johnson and Jenkins pleaded guilty.

Border Liquor Flow Scouted

A.B.C. Cites Figures in Denying Large Sales to Carolinians.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 26.—Reports of heavy liquor sales to North Carolinians by the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control stores along the border have been exaggerated, the board reported today.

The statement was made by T. McCall Frazier, member of the board, who had just completed a study of figures showing that so far as North Carolina border points are concerned, the trade from that area is no greater than that of the like area on the Virginia side and there has been no wholesale attempt to buy Virginia liquor in quantity for bootleg trade in North Carolina.

Mr. Frazier pointed out that the South Boston store, on the border, serving a population area about the same size as that of the Charlottesville store, did a $16,000 business thus far in February, compared to $158,500 in Charlottesville.

The border situation study showed a different condition at Bluefield on the West Virginia border, however. Mr. Frazier said this was because most of the normal trading area of Bluefield is on the West Virginia side of the line, and the portion of Bluefield on the West Virginia side is larger than the Virginia portion.

New Board Is Urged To Plan Naval Program

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 26.—Senator Ridgely Melvin, Anne Arundel County, and Philip Miller, chairman of the county delegation in the House of Delegates, introduced in their respective chambers today a joint resolution requesting Congress to create a centenary planning and building commission of the United States Naval Academy, to commemorate, in 1945, the 100th anniversary of the founding of the institution.

William Bride Dies; Chairman Of Parole Body

William W. Bride, chairman of the District Parole Board and former corporation counsel, died yesterday in Washington Sanitarium, Takoma Park, Md. He had been suffering from a complication of ailments and heart disease.

Stricken last October, Mr. Bride, who was 53 years old, was taken to the sanitarium recently when his condition became critical. Members of his family were at his bedside when he died.

For nearly seven years Mr. Bride served as corporation counsel of the District and as counsel to the Public Utilities Commission. He resigned from these posts in March, 1934, and accepted an appointment as chairman of the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole.

District officials eulogized Mr. Bride.

"Mr. Bride's death takes from Washington a comparatively young man," said People's Counsel William A. Roberts. "During his service he rearranged the law department of the city. Through his efforts its efficiency was greatly increased."

"In the death of Mr. Bride the District has lost an able servant," asserted Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen.

Began Practice in 1905.

Before entering local government work, Mr. Bride had been a lawyer here. He opened his offices in 1905, associated with Charles A. Douglas. In his early law practice here Mr. Bride devoted attention to litigation before the District courts, the Court of Claims and the United States Supreme Court.

Later his private legal work was of varied character and he specialized in international law.

Mr. Bride lived at Edgemoor, Md., many years and was active in civic affairs there, serving as one of the charter members of the Montgomery County Civic Federation and chairman of the public safety committee. With other members of that organization, he helped organize the Bethesda Volunteer Fire Department and for several terms was president of the Bethesda fire board.

From 1924 until 1927 Mr. Bride was counsel of the Rumanian Legation. He also served as counsel for Rumania in Maryland for several years.

A native of Washington, Mr. Bride was born 1881, the son of Cotter T. and Louise Henrietta Bride. He was educated at Eastern High School, St. John's College, Georgetown University, Columbian College (now George Washington University) and the University of Nebraska.

Captain in War.

When the United States entered the World War, Mr. Bride served as a captain in the intelligence division of the Army. After the armistice he returned to his law practice in Washington. Much of his work was before Federal departments.

In July, 1927, Mr. Bride entered the District government, being brought to the office of corporation counsel by Sidney F. Taliaferro, then the Commissioner in charge of legal matters.

One of Mr. Bride's most important acts as corporation counsel was preparation of the bill to legalize the sale of alcoholic beverages for the District.

Mr. Bride was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1900. He was a member of the inaugural committees for President Wilson in 1913 and 1917.

He was a member of the Army and Navy Club, the Racquet Club, the Chevy Chase Club, Delta Chi Fraternity, Sigma Chi Fraternity, the Edgemoor Club and Edgemoor Citizens' Association.

Surviving are his wife, Lulu Mae Fairbanks Bride, and four sons and daughters, Mrs. Paul G. Felix, Adelaide Bride, William W. Bride, jr., and Noel Crawford Bride.

Joseph W. Austin, foreman carpenter of the Capitol Building, was exempted from retirement until March 1, 1937.

S. B. Callahan Is Dead at 68 Of Pneumonia

Appointed Deputy Marshal 37 Years Ago, He Rose to Chief Deputy.

Stephen B. Callahan, 68, chief deputy United States marshal, for many years a familiar figure in District courts, died early yesterday at his residence, 1401 Monroe street northeast. Death was due to pneumonia.

A native of Brooklyn, N. Y., Mr. Callahan came to Washington in 1884, and obtained a job as a Government messenger. Later he operated a bakery business on North Capitol street. He was one of the original members of the Bakers Union in the days of the old Knights of Labor.

Served as Constable.

After this, Mr. Callahan served as constable when that position was attached to the office of justice of the peace, and from this position he went into the marshal's office.

Mr. Callahan was appointed deputy marshal 37 years ago. He continued in the service through several changes in administration, and was named chief deputy in 1923. One of the best informed court attaches on legal procedure Mr. Callahan's knowledge often was turned to the advantage of some young lawyer just starting out in practice.

Active Church Worker.

A member of the Holy Name Society, Mr. Callahan was deeply interested in church work, first in St. Aloysius and later in St. Anthony's parish. He also was active as a member of the Woodmen and the Washington Board of Trade.

Surviving Mr. Callahan are his wife, two sons, Wade and Nicholas Callahan, and two daughters, Mrs. Jack Hurley and Mrs. George Hess. Funeral arrangements had not been completed late yesterday.

Dr. Axson, 67, Dies; Wilson's Brother-in-Law

Stroke at Houston Proves Fatal; Served Red Cross in War Time.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Feb. 26.—Dr. Stockton Axson, brother-in-law of the late President Woodrow Wilson and probably one of the closest intimates of the war-time Chief Executive, died here today. He was 67.

Funeral arrangements were held up pending word from a sister, Mrs. Edward Elliott, of Beverly Hills, Calif.; and two nieces, Mrs. Ellen W. McAdoo, and Miss Margaret Wilson, of New York.

Dr. Axson, professor of English at Rice Institute since he was relieved of Red Cross work soon after the World War, died in a hospital from a stroke he suffered at his home yesterday.

The noted educator came to Rice Institute as a Shakespearean authority in 1914 and remained until 1917. Then he took the stump for Liberty bond drives. Later that year the Red Cross drafted him as secretary-general. The work, which he performed without pay, occupied his time until 1920, when he returned to Rice.

Dr. Axson was born in Rome, Ga., the son of a Presbyterian pastor. While young he became associated with Woodrow Wilson, who had married Dr. Axson's sister. He attended Davidson College in North Carolina, Wesleyan in Connecticut, and Johns Hopkins.

In 1899 he followed Woodrow Wilson to Princeton, remaining there 15 years and holding the title of professor of English most of the time.

No Place For A Smoke Screen.

Certain accusations against Karl Kindleberger, assistant United States attorney for the District, have been made before the House Crime Investigating Committee. Because of conflicting statements the truth of the stories told the committee is very difficult to ascertain. Judgment concerning any of the individuals concerned must be withheld, of course, until the incident is more fully explained. Nevertheless, it is said that criminal charges have been suppressed without adequate reason and that at some point personal considerations have obstructed enforcement of the law.

In view of the testimony presented before the committee the suggestion of United States District Attorney Garnett that "gamblers are behind the attempt to discredit this office" seems far-fetched. The accusation against Mr. Kindleberger comes from a member of the police force. If there is any evidence of underworld influence behind the story of Policeman Peters, Mr. Garnett himself should be able to make an interesting addition to his testimony before the committee.

Disinterested service to the public demands that the District Attorney investigate his own office whenever there is the slightest suspicion of improper conduct. Mr. Garnett will do well to take the lead in sifting the truth from the conflicting testimony in this case. Certainly he would not expect the public to be satisfied with irrelevant counter charges when the work of his subordinates is scrutinized.

Aside from airing incidents of an unsavory character, the committee appears to be making considerable progress in shaping remedial legislation. Chairman Randolph has indicated that it will seek to prohibit legal officers of the District and the Federal Government from engaging in the private practice of law. Officials employed on a full-time basis should give their full time to the government. It is perhaps still more important from the viewpoint of disinterested service that attorneys representing the public should be forbidden simultaneously to serve a private clientele.

It May Be Too Late.

The District Commissioners' request for PWA funds to construct minor court buildings, designed to become part of the Municipal Center, comes at an inopportune time. Administrator Ickes has just informed two Governors that PWA funds have been exhausted and that no further applications can be received unless Congress appropriates a new public works fund. And confusion clouds the prospects of the work-relief bill.

By a special act the last Congress recognized the equity of the District's request for loans and grants comparable to those advanced to other municipalities. Congress fixed the limit on advances to the District at $10,750,000, thus indicating what it considered to be Washington's share of the lump sum entrusted to the PWA for distribution. However, the PWA has allocated to the District only a little more than half that sum.

When the $8,000,000 set aside for a District sewage disposal plant was cut in half, there was said to be an understanding that the remainder of this sum would be made available for the Municipal Center. But introduction of the bill carrying that grant of authority has been delayed until the coffers of the PWA are virtually empty. Construction of much-needed quarters for the Police, Municipal and Juvenile Courts appears to be contingent, therefore, upon the appropriation of additional funds.

In view of the fact that 30 per cent of the funds secured from the PWA by municipalities represents outright gifts, it seems strange that local authorities have not been more aggressive in pressing claims for construction so much more defensible than many PWA undertakings throughout the Nation.

Academic Freedom.

Many a different interpretation may be made of the above phrase, but it has remained for the American Progressive Education Association to widen the scope of its application far beyond the doors of mid-wifery or school.

In order to triumph over the "forces now operating to destroy democracy," says the association, affiliation should be made between "teachers, news writers, editorial writers, clergymen and publishers"—all of whom "controlling interest for the dissemination of the truth." This affiliation would have a common purpose operating throughout the delicate field of opinion. It would protect teachers in their right to discuss both facts and theories fully and fearlessly; it would support the campaign for the elimination of repressive controls in public and private institutions; and it would fight aggressively and persistently against the enemies of free speech, a free press and free schools.

This program in itself is directed toward the preservation of academic freedom as it has long been known in this country. But the aims are expressed more clearly when the association promises "unalterable opposition to the domination of educational thought by an organization or group acting or based upon a dictatorial philosophy."

If that liberty, which the Constitution was written to preserve, is to be truly safeguarded, there is no better place to begin the battle than in the schools. For as long as teachers are guaranteed the right to free and open inquiry, the minds of those in their care will not become shut to those "subtle influences" which, from many quarters, are threatening to abridge the fundamental guarantees of freedom around which the Constitution was written.

Dodging The Issue.

Administration leaders are relying upon a mobilization of public opinion to reverse the action of the Senate on the $4,880,000,000 public works measure. They seem to think that if sufficient protest can be aroused against the prevailing wage amendment, enough votes will be changed to insure enactment of the joint resolution in its original form. Consequently, the public is invited to condemn Senators who voted for the McCarran amendment.

The wisdom of such tactics is open to serious question. The Senate is an extremely independent body. Efforts to bring public pressure upon its members have already aroused considerable resentment. An appeal to the public from its judgment may only intensify the differences between the White House and Congress, with an adverse effect upon this and other pending measures.

Moreover, the point on which congressional leaders are seeking public support is not the central issue in the controversy. The President's opposition to the McCarran amendment already has widespread support. His insistence that the wages paid on work relief should be less than those offered by private employers is so fundamentally sound that further argument should not be necessary to sustain it. The real issue is not what wages should be paid on work relief, but whether a gigantic public-works appropriation, for which no definite program has been made public, is a practical alternative to direct relief.

Only a minority in the Senate favors payment of prevailing wages on job-creating projects. The votes which finally carried the McCarran amendment were obviously directed at the bill itself. A more realistic appeal to public opinion would be concerned with the basic issue of whether nearly five billion dollars should be spent in a hastily-devised pump-priming venture. But, of course, the public can make no intelligent reply to this question as long as the manner in which this money would be spent, and the projects for which it is intended, remain official secrets.

In these circumstances the attempt to mobilize public opinion on a detail can only be regarded as evasion of the underlying issue. Congress is well aware of the doubts aroused by the request for blanket authorization to spend $4,880,000,000. Indeed it is entirely possible that the uncertainty and apprehension created by this request, and vague testimony like that of Admiral Peoples on Government-owned filling stations, will destroy more employment opportunities than the Government can create. It is not the McCarran amendment but the fundamental issue which ought to be thrashed out before any move is launched to revive this disgracefully sloppy legislation.

A Slick And Pulp Grouch.

With everything inside the home, and out, electrified, mechanized and simplified for the convenience of twentieth centurians, it may be asked why something isn't done about the present unwieldy format of magazines. The grouch isn't against any particular one. It applies to any and all of them! Following no pattern, subscribing to no standard of size, disregarding entirely the problems and pleasures of the reader, they nevertheless continue to live and prosper. Some are fat, some lean, some too long to fit in a magazine rack, and others too small to find without protracted searching.

Then there is the matter of paper, titles and binding. The so-called "slick" magazines were all right until they started a silent campaign to see which could be the slickest. As a result, it's impossible now to curl up with one and attempt to read it in bed. The glasslike quality of the pages catch every ray of light and give off a blinding iridescence.

A title is no longer a title! It's a decorative bit of promotion placed at the top of the page for atmosphere. It is either so embellished with misty galleons or vague but irritating suggestions of springtime that it is impossible to figure out the letters. Presumably it is simply there for the purpose of putting the reader in the proper mood before tackling the story.

Not last and not least are the bindings on certain of the highbrow magazines. Human ingenuity has not yet devised a satisfactory plan for making them stay propped open against a glass or sugar bowl while pursuing a lousy meal.

One finds the desired page, stands the magazine with the care given to a house of cards, trusts to providence and the publisher, and takes a bite of toast. Suddenly, the magazine folds up and goes plop! That one's place is lost is of the least consequence. Of major concern at this juncture is whether the magazine lands in oatmeal or coffee. The oatmeal is messier, the coffee wetter. Either way, the decision goes to the magazine. The only thing left then is to break the binding and get whatever recompense there is in imagining it's the publisher's neck.

The Pepper Pool.

Details of the wild venture of the British pool or syndicate that recently tried to corner the market in white pepper will probably shatter American illusions about the superior astuteness of the British speculator.

To judge from available accounts, the pool members betrayed an ignorance of market conditions that seems almost unbelievable, even neglecting to take account of the fact that black pepper, little used in Great Britain, might be treated and converted into white pepper. Of course, it is possible that the syndicate members were simply gambling on the chance of "cashing in" on their paper profits before their miscalculations were revealed to the world.

At any rate, the pool began to advance prices by offering to buy any amounts of pepper offered for sale. The result was a spectacular rise which caused hidden supplies to come upon the market in great quantities. The syndicate either had to receive all this pepper or else be prepared for a catastrophic drop in prices. By the end of January, white pepper supplies in the London market are reported to have been sufficient to supply the world demand for two years.

The time had at last arrived when the speculators could no longer pay for the amounts for which they had contracted. Consequently the pool collapsed, bringing ruin to a number of long-established firms that had placed orders in good faith for account of the speculators. The result has been a series of failures and near failures, averted only by banking aid, which constitute a most unsavory episode in the history of the City of London.

The fact that various well-known individuals, including the head of a great joint stock bank, are connected with concerns that had direct or indirect dealings with the pool has given a flavor of scandal to an affair that at best reflects seriously upon the intelligence and public spirit of all those who participated in it. Possibly the depression, which has greatly restricted the opportunities for gambling in speculative securities accounts in part for the avidity with which a certain type of individual seizes upon a chance to gain from speculation in commodities.

If losses were limited to those immediately engaged in such operations, nobody would worry greatly about them. But as the London Economist points out in a detailed discussion of the pepper pool, there is a great difference between organized speculation which tends to even out market fluctuations and "raiding" operations by ignorant outsiders. The latter type of operations is carried on at the expense of merchants regularly engaged in buying and selling commodities, greatly increasing their risks and often, as in the case of the pepper pool, throwing reputable concerns into bankruptcy.

Business and financial leaders appear to have been singularly indifferent to the operations of the pepper pool, if not actively interested in its success. Demands for government regulation will grow in Great Britain, as in this country, if the men who indulge in such antisocial operations are not held in check by the force of public opinion.

Another Saint Thomas.

A new saint is about to be added to the calendar of canonized literary men. Four hundred and nineteen years ago he wrote a book that still lives. By noon of July 6 next four centuries will have passed since the author's head topped a spike on London Bridge. He was executed for persisting in a thesis which, according to the prosecution, he summed up in the phrase, "No Parliament can make the king supreme head of the church."

In 1886 Pope Leo XIII added the name of Thomas More and that of the cardinal who suffered with him—Bishop John Fisher, of Rochester—"to the roll of those whom the Roman Church accounts 'blessed.'" Now Pope Pius XI has announced his approval of the canonization of both these men. This is the first occasion since England disclaimed the papal authority that "such posthumous honor has been done an Englishman."

Nevertheless, Sir Thomas More has long been an unofficial saint in the hearts of his literary successors and in the minds of all students of government. The embodiment of learning, he was also the personification of simplicity. He was at once a master ironist and a gentle scholar. His "Utopia" ranks with the best of Swift as a political-social satire. But it also ranks with Plato's "Republic" among the world's dreams of the ideal commonwealth.

Most of us make the mistake of trying to acquire things to live with and on instead of for.

"Facts Over Fiction."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As secretary of the Washington Open Forum, a Democrat and a Government employe, I take this opportunity to denounce as false the allegations that the organization is "red." It is not radical. It is not conservative, either. It is, as the President informed the Board of Education, neutral and most of its members are Democrats or Republicans. It is not committed to any principle except that of conducting lectures and debates under reasonable restrictions.

As I have said, I am a Democrat. I come from a Democratic family and my party connections are well known, both here and in my home State, Connecticut. I have no criticism of those who look at things differently than I do, whether Republicans, Progressives, Farmer-Laborites, Socialists or even Communists, and I hope I have enough good sportsmanship and spirit of fair play so that I shall not attempt to throttle my neighbor with contrary opinions. Therefore, it has been possible for me to enjoy personal friendship with many who are on the other side of the fence politically.

I disagree on certain points with Mr. Linn Gale, president of the Washington Open Forum, but this has not interfered with our friendship and it does not prevent me from giving him credit for being an efficient and impartial presiding officer. Since we want efficiency and impartiality in a chairman, what business is it of ours what his private political or religious opinions are? I do not permit anybody to thrust his ideas on me and I do not want to thrust mine on anybody else. Some people are so intolerant that they can not achieve this fairness. I hope that I am a trifle above such bigotry.

It would be a good plan if certain persons within a short distance would ascertain what Thomas Jefferson said about tolerance, freedom of conscience and real democracy. They would learn that he fought bitterly against efforts to suppress minority opinions. Their attitude in this matter of the Washington Open Forum is quite harmonious with the practices of Hitler and Mussolini, but far from the broad liberalism of Jefferson.

Not a single Senator, Representative or other speaker who has addressed the Open Forum in the two or three years of my association with it has ever found any unfairness or disorder in its meetings. Certainly none of the Senators, Representatives or other public officials, who have spoken for the forum, can be considered "Red." I suggest that critics who know nothing about the matter except outlandish and preposterous rumors talk with former Senator Brookhart, Senator Copeland, Dr. Ezekiel, Dr. Stokes and others of our speakers and see whether these men thought the meetings were orderly or not. Personally, I have a preference for facts over fiction in such matters.

Secretary, Washington Open Forum.

Wants Longer Yellow.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Statistics show that Washington holds the unenviable record of being first or nearly first in automobile fatalities per capita in the United States. Is this because Washington drivers are less intelligent or more reckless than those in other cities? Certainly not! The principle of large numbers dictates that the average driver in Washington is just about as intelligent and just about as reckless as the average driver in any other city. This being true, then recent campaigns, educational and otherwise, have been directed at the wrong end.

Most auto-pedestrian collisions occur at intersections. This is due to motorists trying to "beat" the light and pedestrians doing the same or walking against the light. The pedestrian is told that he must cross only on the green. But do those who implore the pedestrians to cross on green realize that they are asking almost the impossible?

The average pedestrian who endeavors to negotiate one of this city's broad thoroughfares may start on the green but by the time he gets half way across he finds the light suddenly switched to yellow, where it is kept for about four seconds and then turns red. Why not give both the pedestrian and the motorist a break in something besides bones by installing at each intersection a light which permits the walker to walk while all other traffic stops long enough to allow him to reach the other side?

This is just one thing—but one at a time is about all the apparent capacities of the traffic lawmakers can digest. HAROLD FISHER.

Virginia Power.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Representative Rankin, of Mississippi, in a recent radio speech, referring to electrification of rural communities and advocating Government ownership of such utilities, stated that power to operate electric appliances for the home, in the State of Virginia, cost each family $12.50 as contrasted with a proposed cost of $4.50 per month under Government control and operation. Such statement was not only misleading but entirely incorrect.

The proposed Government price of $4.50 per month per family does not include the cost of operation, which would be paid by the United States Government out of the people's estate, of which Congress is the executor. The power mentioned by Mr. Rankin actually costs us between $4 and $6 per month per family, depending upon whether an electric pump is used to supply the house with water. The other utilities mentioned by Mr. Rankin—an electric range, refrigerator, lights, washing machine, iron and radio, costs less than $5 per month for each family.

This power is furnished by the Virginia Public Service Co., which pays the cost of all operation—the taxpayers' estate, held in trust by Congress, bears no part of the expense. Besides this moderate cost to the Virginia people thousands of Virginians have invested small savings in this company. These investors are satisfied with the dividends paid and all the people are satisfied with the service rendered by the State company.

For the United States Government to destroy the power companies means to destroy the life savings of thousands of widows and small investors. Virginians do not believe in concentrating power in the hands of the Federal Government. The Government is merely an aggregation of men elected by the people; and, because of much corruption in politics, such men are not always either good business men or men of patriotic vision. The present Administration is rapidly destroying the security of small investors and the confidence which they once had in their Government.

The "weasel words" being used to deceive the people; to kill private initiative; to destroy individual thrift; to make the people believe that a few men in control in Washington are actuated by patriotic and humane motives in wresting control of the people's estate from Congress and setting up a dictatorship, is contrary to the teachings of the Constitution of the United States, and destructive of the freedom for which our forefathers fought so valiantly.

On Liquor Regulations.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our organization desires to compliment you very highly on the editorials that have appeared in The Post against the unseen bars. We feel that the Congress will give us some relief and we attribute the support we have gained on this question largely to your editorials.

We are also on record in favor of liquor for off-sale consumption being sold only in exclusive off-sale package stores.

We are also in favor of restricting the number of licenses in the District.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Thrift.

Representative Andrew J. May, of Kentucky, asked the House of Representatives for two and one-half minutes in which to discuss conditions in Mexico. Two and one-half minutes later, Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Texas, asked for two minutes and one-quarter in which to reply. It thus appears that affairs in Mexico were discussed in four and three-quarters minutes. At any rate, what time other great questions?

If less than five minutes is needed to "discuss" conditions in Mexico, how many seconds should be required by a Congressman to consider the Japanese control of Manchukuo? How many minutes for the future of NIRA? Why devote thousands of words to a speech if the congressional mind is capable of confining a discussion to the space of 150 seconds? Such allotment of time gives evidence of the tendencies of the present. Oratory was once an affair of hours. Now we have the two-minute speech. The ten-word oration may be in the offing.

The old persists in the midst of the new. Congressional rules still permit long addresses. But it might be said with show of reason that Congress would make no greater number of blunders if every speech was subject to a two-minute rule. That restriction might be a boon to members who under the present system find it difficult to obtain the floor. The rule could be made to apply to each Congressman in turn. It would give him the right to make a speech at least twice a week. He could then do his part in showing that, as brevity is the soul of wit, so it may be the embodiment of congressional wisdom.

A New Gospel?

Post Office, Wednesday.

FOUR torn pages and one still smaller scrap of Greek papyrus, found a while ago in Egypt and recently conveyed to the British Museum, were the other day declared by scholars to date from a period at least as distant as the middle of the second century. If this declaration is correct, those ancient documents are the earliest original Christian manuscripts known to be extant.

The museum's keeper of manuscripts, H. Idris Bell, expresses a belief that the rest of the work of which the recovered pages are a part may yet be discovered. The present bits cast confirmatory light upon certain disputed passages in the Gospel of St. John. Written in a literary chirography, the papyri are hailed as fragments of a long-forgotten Gospel antedating that of St. Luke.

"Many," says the Gospel of St. Luke, "have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses."

Who were these writers and what were their books?

Even assuming that they included the other three canonical Evangelists, the word "many" implies more than the accepted trio. Of apocryphal Gospels we have some knowledge through mutilated copies, and through references in the writings of the early Church Fathers. But most of such copies and references indicate that the works were of an advanced post-Apostolic date.

The British Museum's new papyri are apparently quite another matter. Mr. Bell is of opinion that they bring us "into touch, either immediately or at one remove," with those authors mentioned by St. Luke.

The British Museum Quarterly, probably in its next issue, will contain an analysis of the new acquisitions, whereafter the Museum will publish the text, with commentaries, in a volume to be called "Fragments of an Unknown Gospel and Other Early Christian Papyri." Meantime, Mr. Bell writes in the London Times:

"Neither of the leaves is complete, but, by the help of parallels in the New Testament, it is possible to complete most of the lines with certainty or with a high degree of probability."

Unfortunately one of the breaks in the manuscript occurs just where there begins mention of an incident not recorded in the known Gospels: This "episode, which occurred on the banks of the Jordan," concerns a "strange question" by which, the broken papyrus says, Christ astonished His hearers. "But the context is at present largely obscure. The incident may . . . be a practical illustration of the truth expressed in the saying (St. John, xii, 24): 'Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.'"

A clearer passage tells how some inquirers "began to tempt him with a question, saying, Master, . . . we know that thou art come from God, for the things which thou doest testify above all the prophets." Although the question itself is missing, it seems to be either a variant of the query mentioned in St. Luke, xx:20-26 and in the other Synoptists or else "an incident in Galilee, such as may perhaps be inferred from St. Mark, iii: 6."

Another portion of the newly discovered text parallels that of St. John in several important particulars and contains the episode of the frustrated stoning, whereupon the healing of a leper is as given by the Synoptists. Mr. Bell supplies in parentheses his recontruction of the mutilated sentences:

"But he himself, even the Lord, going out through the midst of them, departed from them. And behind, there cometh unto him a leper and saith, Master Jesus, journeying with lepers and eating with them in the inn, I myself also became a leper. If, therefore, thou wilt, I am made clean. The Lord then said unto him, I will; be thou clean. And straightway the leprosy departed from him. (And the Lord said unto him), Go (and show thyself) unto the (priests) . . ."

Mr. Bell feels that "here we seem pretty certainly to meet" a narrative "independent of the Synoptic version and concurrent with it. And," he adds, "there is considerable probability that the new detail added" by this British Museum papyrus "is an authentic part of the story."

The London Times editorializes:

"Readers will perceive at once wherein the importance of these 'two imperfect leaves lies.' The problems raised . . . are obviously of the highest moment, but Mr. Bell only hints at the conclusions which may be drawn."

Nevertheless, upon one point the British Museum's Keeper of Manuscripts is emphatic:

"In any case," says he, "these fragments . . . bring us well into the sub-Apostolic Age."

Persecution Is Denied By Mexican President

Cardenas And Portes Gil Explain Official Attitude Toward Religion And Education.

Special Correspondence to The Post.

Mexico City.

IN the past few weeks there has been a veritable flood of articles and lectures on "The Truth About Mexico." The clerical question, the socialistic educational program of the Mexican government and its "atheism" have provoked a deluge of comments and criticisms which have culminated in a demand for withdrawing American recognition, for the removal of Ambassador Josephus Daniels, and for vehement protests from our State Department against uncivilized practices and affronts to personal liberty and religious toleration.

The only "truth" about Mexico is there is no single "truth" about it. One might almost as well talk about the "truth" of the universe and its myriad stars, planets and other celestial manifestations. Mexico is a multicolored land of many cultures, climates, customs and costumes.

Mexico is a country of many opinions, of many schools of thought, of numberless facets. On all sides of every thorny question of the day there is some truth. Neither the church, nor the government, nor the schools, nor the masses have any monopoly on either the "truth" or on the right. All are partly right and all are partly wrong.

Interviews with the heads of the Mexican church and state proved highly illuminating to this correspondent, who had gone to Mexico with the idea in the back of his head that the Mexican government was overstepping itself and was going to extremes neither warranted by the ideals of the revolution nor by any actual occurrences in Mexico's recent history.

• • • •

PRESIDENT CARDENAS, the youngest chief executive Mexico has ever had, is a short, stubby man, who keeps himself in trim for his job by frequent two-hour swims in water colder than the average individual can stand. He is as democratic in his manner as he is in his ideas. He has moved from the big presidential palace into a smaller home, snatches bites to eat in a small restaurant near his offices, and crowds into a day, that often lasts from 9 in the morning to 3 the next morning, more work than the average individual can accomplish in three times that number of hours. He is quiet, reserved and thoughtful. He has none of the effusiveness of the Latin. He thinks before he answers. He is courteous to and thoughtful of those who have come to see him.

"We have no problems we can not solve" was his reply to my first question. He referred with some pride to the efforts even then being made to distribute land among the landless, and made it apparent that this was one of his chief joys. "No Mexican or foreign interests which obey the law have anything to fear from the Mexican government. We have no desire to persecute anyone or any organization • • • It is absolutely false that we are atheistic in our ideas or purposes • • • We have no desire to influence anyone's private thinking."

With reference to talk about a widespread revolutionary movement against his government, President Cardenas volunteered the information that all taxes are being paid, all the budget expenses are being met and that if in any part of the republic there were organized revolutionary movements these would be reflected immediately in the tax receipts. He is confident that the goals of his administration coincide with the wishes of the majority of his people and that his policies will result in raising the living standards of the Indians and of the lower classes generally.

HE denied that any of the present activities of the government are either artificial or in the nature of smoke screens to cover up breakdowns in the revolution. The denial was to be expected. But the manner and evident sincerity of the president in referring to an anti-government propaganda, both in Mexico and abroad, left no doubt in this correspondent's mind that he feels that he and his nation are being victimized by forces out of his control.

The man is courageous, and his recent efforts to curb drinking by taxing highly intoxicating liquors is an illustration of this fact and of his own personal love for the underdogs of Mexico. Maguey plantations are a large industry in Mexico, and those who have millions of dollars invested in the cultivation of this plant, from which pulque and tequila are distilled, will not welcome a decree which will eventually wipe them out. Though President Cardenas is providing them with ample time in which to readjust themselves, he is determined to go ahead regardless of all consequences, save those which will accrue to Mexico's laboring classes. This industry and the drinking of these beverages antedates colonial times. But neither the age nor the universality of the habit have deterred the president.

Señor Portes Gil, the foreign minister and former president of the republic, a full-blooded Indian, with a gracious personality and a well-informed mind, spoke to me for more than an hour. He provided a key for an understanding of the educational program of Mexico, which, if he is sincere and correct, throws an entirely different light on the whole question from the one which it has received in the press of the United States up to now.

WITH an amazing frankness he admitted that the early educational program of the revolution had failed. When the revolution set out to strip the church of its economic, political and educational powers and privileges, the revolution determined to adopt an educational program which should be "rational and scientific;" in other words, coldly objective and devoid of all moral concepts and sentimental standards; a mathematically precise sort of education, so to speak. "But we found," said Portes Gil, "that this educational program failed on the character-building side. Our students emerged without ideals. The real purpose of our socialist education is to develop social-mindedness."

Just as the English word nationalist and the Spanish word nacionalista mean two different things, so it is evident from the explanation of the Mexican Foreign Minister that the Mexican use of the term "Socialist" may be misleading. Their program does not propose to inculcate, officially, Marxian materialistic concepts of society, economics and politics, but rather a socialistic ideal of life—a love of fellow man, a loyalty to high ideals of personal and public conduct, a warm civic purpose and attitude, and an intelligent patriotism. The Mexican Government, far from being materialistic and cold, is endeavoring now to supply in its educational systems those character-building elements which were excised when the church was pushed out of the educational institutions of that land.

This is the official version of the educational and religious ideas and ideals of the present administration in Mexico. All the facts do not accord with these views. But Mexico is a federal republic with many states conducting their own government and putting into practice their own policies. Yet all the contumely and condemnation have been poured on the heads of the administration in the federal capital. And this hardly seems fair.

The Messages.

CONSIDERATION is being given to the use of PWA funds for the stimulation of message sending in the $5,000,000,000 works bill controversy.

BARGERON.

While some Administration influences still insist the messages are pouring in demanding that recalcitrant Senators support the President, and, although the publicity men accompanying Mr. Roosevelt report a heartening flow, it is no secret that the response has been way below expectations; that, in fact, there has been little response at all.

Administration psychologists, however, believe the explanation for this lack of response lies elsewhere than in the loss of popularity by the President. They believe the reason is that there has been too heavy a draft on the country's message senders. Having just gone through a message-sending spree with Father Coughlin on the World Court, it would be expecting too much of the people for them to come right back so soon with another deluge. The Administration economists, agreeing with the psychologists and basing their conclusion on the message-sending index covering the period 1929-34, hold that the message-sending pocketbook must be about depleted.

It is on this finding that the suggestion for the use of PWA funds arises. Sponsors of the plan take pains to point out that under no circumstances would these funds be made available if the people didn't really want to send the messages. The assumption is they really want to send them, but simply haven't funds with which to do so. To deny a people their bent for sending messages because they haven't the money is not good government in a democracy. It would go far, it is pointed out, toward adding to the unrest prevalent in the country.

A point to be decided in connection with the use of PWA funds, of course, is how many man-hours it would create among the employes of the telegraph companies, that is to say, just what proportion of money spent on message-sending goes to wages and what proportion goes to overhead and profits for the owners.

The NRA points out that unfortunately the telegraph companies have not yet been codified and for this reason it is not easy to answer this question. It is but another example, the NRA points out, of why the telegraph companies should be codified. Were they operating under codes now the NRA statisticians could tell in a few minutes by looking at their charts just how much of the message-spending money goes for overhead and profits and how much goes for wages.

Man-hours are, of course, the controlling factor in the award of PWA funds, except in the Navy awards, but they were made by Mr. Roosevelt. What is really meant is that man-hours are the controlling factor in all awards made by Mr. Ickes.

• • • •

There is a school of Mr. Roosevelt's advisors, however, which contends PWA funds should be made available for message-sending regardless of the man-hour factor. Those of this school hold that message sending, that is, message-sending to Senators and members of Congress to support this or to defeat that, is a service that should be taken over by the Federal Government.

The overwhelming majority of message-senders, it is pointed out, have no concern in the matter about which they send messages, that like psychiatrists, handwriting experts and economists, they will send messages on either side of the question. Should the Government take over the message-sending business, it is contended, it would insure its always getting the support of the messages. As it stands now any propagandist can come along and get messages sent.

Skin-Games In The Old West, As Shown In 'Soapy' Smith's High-Flying But Brief Career.

By Theodore Hall.

SCENE: a street in Denver in 1888. In the background a group lounging cow hands, horse-wranglers, and stock-men. In the foreground a tall, flashy figure, black-bearded, waving his arms as he orates. A tray on a tripod stands before him.

"Wake up, you dreamers, and listen!" he cries. "One question—the supreme question—before us today is vital to the welfare of the republic! Gentlemen, the all-important question which I propound to you and for which I earnestly seek answer is this: How are you fixed for soap?"

"Soapy" Smith, one of the most picturesque and lawless of the Old West's confidence men, is in action. His buccaneering story will delight any lover of genus Americans, sub-species Western "bad man." William Ross Collier and Edwin Victor Westrate have dug it out of old records and told it with gusto in the pages of "The Reign of Soapy Smith: Monarch of Misrule" (Doubleday Doran, $2.50). But let us go back to that Denver street corner.

• • • •

"SOAPY" eyes his audience after that question. "I hear no response," his eloquent tongue rolls out the phrases. "I fear I embarrass you. In all honesty, gentlemen, most of you look as if you needed soap, and your silence distresses me." And then he goes on to explain that he is selling a wonder soap—it will make a face shine like the noonday sun; it will grow hair on a bald head, and restore the pristine color of aged locks; it will wash all sin from a sorry conscience.

And further, today, of all days, he is giving away the most opulent cash prizes to the lucky. "Cleanliness, gentlemen, is next to godliness, but the feel of good, crisp greenbacks in the pocket is paradise itself."

Then "Soapy" proceeds to wrap up the white bars in sheets of blue paper—every so often, with grand, conspicuous gestures, enclosing now a $50 or a $20 bill in the package, now a $5 or a $1. The onlookers crowd close.

"Now, gentlemen," he cries, "I am offering this miracle-working soap at 25 cents—if you wish to buy the soap alone. But——" his eyes flash with scorn for such pikers "——if you have any sporting blood and wish to take a chance on winning one of these little green papers with the big numbers on them, I will sell you a bar of soap from these I've already wrapped for the ridiculous price of $5—and you will have the privilege of drawing your own package."

With a bit more warming up the crowd begins to lay its money on the gamble. "Got you, stranger!" shouts an old-timer happily, waving a $50 bill from the package he has bought as he pushes out of the crowd. And then it's a rush until the soap is gone. "Soapy" folds up his stand and makes swiftly off.

He goes to a hotel, climbs the stairs, and enters a room to find a strangely assorted group of figures waiting for him. In the front row stands the above-mentioned old-timer holding out his $50, and anyone with half an eye can see that the rest of the men are precisely those in the street crowd who won anything more than $2 in their packages.

Back come the bills to "Soapy." He counts them and remarks: "All present and accounted for. I thought for a while I had slipped, but I was pretty sure these were all I had left in the pile for you to pick up. And now, boys, how about a drink?"

• • • •

SUCH was the "con game" which gave 28-year-old Jefferson Randolph Smith, renegade from a prominent Georgia family impoverished by the war, his name, fame, and first push to fortune as the "King of Bunco" in the woolly West. He was to hold that rank for ten years.

Around him he built up a gang of as unholy rascals as you could imagine, all adepts at one sort of chicanery or another. "Doc" Bangs was the gold-brick expert. "Fatty" Gray, also pleasantly known as "Shoot-Your-Eyes-Out," was the strong-arm man. "Eat-'Em-Up" Cohen and "Great Gobblefish" Bruce had their parts. A little man named Murphy had the irremovable nickname of "Ice Box"—gained from the day when, as an amateur yegg working on a butcher shop, he carefully drilled and dynamited the steel refrigerator instead of the safe. Most picturesque sobriquet of all was that of "Yankee Hank Fewclothes," so called because in the coldest weather he was never known to wear vest, coat or topcoat.

• • • •

ODDLY, "Soapy" was something of a Robin Hood—befriending the poor, cleaning up the town of all shysters but his own (which earned the gratitude of the respectable), even preaching to a Bible class on the evils of low ways. He was not hypocritical in this—merely wise enough to look at himself.

He became dictator in Denver, then in the silver-boom-town of Creede, Colo., then in Skagway, Alaska, during the gold rush of '97, and in the next year down came the house of marked cards and shell games. A "Committee of 101" declared Skagway had had enough of "Soapy's" gang and gambling saloon. Four days after "Soapy" had made a personal triumph of the Independence Day celebration he'd arranged, he was shot down on Juneau Wharf.

Messrs. Collier and Westrate do full justice to the telling of "Soapy's" lurid career. I haven't half suggested the richness of anecdote, which ranges from time when "Soapy" started to recruit a "Mexican Foreign Legion" for President Porfirio Diaz, to the proud day when Skagway offered to ship its six-guns to the East Coast as a defense against the Spaniards, with the intricacies of fleecing the gullible in between. You must read the book yourself to vote it the grandest picaresque yarn we've had so far this year.

Seized As Drunk Drivers.

Salisbury, Md., Feb. 26 (AP).—Seven persons were arrested during the past nine days on charges of drunken driving here. Three were fined $100 each, one was sentenced to the House of Correction for four months, another for three months, one case dismissed and the seventh was continued.

Longfellow's Birthday

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps

TODAY is Longfellow's birthday. He was born February 27, 1807, and died March 24, 1882.

He entered the world and departed from it in good company; he was born in the same year with Whittier and died in the same year with Emerson.

Longfellow is the most popular English-writing poet. Natives and foreigners who learn English can quote Longfellow if they can quote anything.

Millions of school children have been brought up on "Hiawatha," "Evangeline," the "Psalm of Life," "Excelsior," and innumerable other favorites.

• • • •

It is a great deal easier to ridicule Longfellow than it is to forget him; and there is no reason why anyone should ridicule him. Most of those who do ridicule him would be very glad if anyone would buy or read anything they write.

Of course, for our taste of today such lines as "Life is real, Life is earnest," are too obvious. The poem "Excelsior" is absurd; and there is a commonplaceness about Longfellow's sentiment and his moralizing that is not adapted to our ways of thinking.

Yet Longfellow was not only a popular, he was a great poet. The sonnets that he wrote to accompany the translation of Dante, the poem called "The Day Is Done," and others, are imperishable classics. In "Evangeline" he wrote the best English hexameters. "Hiawatha" is not only an original epic, it is aboriginal; and though that metre seems easy enough, no one else has succeeded with it.

How interesting it is that in Bowdoin College, in Maine, our most popular poet, Longfellow, and our greatest novelist, Hawthorne, were classmates!

If at any time, an oversophisticated reader imagines that Longfellow is negligible, I suggest that he read Longfellow's sonnet

Chaucer.

The chamber walls depicted all around
With portraitures of huntsman, hawk, and hound,
And the hurt deer. He listeneth to the lark,
Whose song comes with the sunshine through the dark
Of painted glass in leaden lattice bound;
He listeneth and he laugheth at the sound,
Then writeth in a book like any clerk.
He is the poet of the dawn, who wrote
The Canterbury Tales, and his old age
Made beautiful with song; and as I read
I hear the crowing cock, I hear the note
Of lark and linnet, and from every page

Relief Bill Reveals Legislative Defects

Two Constitutional Changes Suggested To Remedy Evils In Present System.

By Elliott Thurston.

RECENT developments at the Capitol bring into focus again two proposals for changing the Constitution. One would give the Executive authority to kill specific items in bills without being obliged to veto an entire bill. The other would permit Cabinet officers to have seats on the floor of the Senate and House and participate in debate.

Representative Harlan, Ohio Democrat, is the author of an amendment to provide seats in Congress for Cabinet officers. The House Judiciary Committee is soon to hold hearings on this measure. It is by no means a new idea. It has been suggested by practical experience as well as by the British example. Mr. Hoover was for it, though he probably refrained from open advocacy of it because of the persistent though erroneous notion that he had a strong British bias.

Actually, the idea long antedates Mr. Hoover. In 1864 a select committee of Congress favorably reported a measure providing that Cabinet members should have the privilege of sitting in the House and of participating in debate. Their presence would have been required at the opening of sessions on Mondays and Thursdays, and members would have had the right to give notice to the clerk of information desired from the Cabinet.

"Without disparagement to the ability or fidelity of members of Congress," said the committee report, "it may safely be asserted that scarcely any measure is brought before Congress, whether of public or private nature, to the wise determination of which the departments may not contribute valuable aid, either by information as to facts or suggestions as to policy."

AGAIN in 1881, another select committee made the same recommendation and said, "This system will require the selection of the strongest men to be heads of departments and will require them to be well equipped with the knowledge of their offices. It will also require the strongest men to be the leaders of Congress and participate in debate. It will bring these strong men in contact, perhaps into conflict, to advance the public weal, and thus stimulate their abilities and their efforts, and will thus assuredly result in the good of the country."

In an article published by Review of Reviews in April, 1893, Woodrow Wilson wrote, "The degree of separation now maintained between the executive and legislative branches of our Government can not long be preserved without very serious inconveniences resulting. Congress and the President now treat with one another almost like separate governments, so jealous is each of its prerogatives . . . We risk every degree of friction and disharmony rather than hazard the independence of branches of the Government which are helpless without each other."

President Taft in his last annual message made the same recommendation, and it was echoed again in 1924 by Charles Evans Hughes in an address in which he said, "We can preserve the advantages of stability and enhance the opportunities of executive leadership, not by overriding the cherished prerogatives of the Congress, or by attempting to gain an illicit advantage for that leadership, but by having a recognized contact through the regular admission of Cabinet officers to the floor of both houses. • • • It would not be difficult to arrange the mechanism of such contact if its importance were recognized."

• • • •

SIMILARLY the proposal to give the Executive authority to veto specific items has frequently been urged by students of government. Both of these suggested changes would go far toward making possible a far greater degree of party responsibility than now exists. And this becomes increasingly necessary as the Federal Government assumes more and more control over affairs hitherto beyond its purview or supposed domain. Both would tend to unify national parties on national, rather than on sectional lines, and so make it more possible to devise and execute policy in the national interest.

The now deadlocked relief bill is a conspicuous example of defects in the present system. The Executive sent in this bill without adequate explanation of the theory or facts. Congress was unable to elicit specific information as to why it was asked to make a blanket delegation of its authority to spend $4,880,000,000. Many suspected that the Administration could not explain satisfactorily. If that is so, then the country should know it—and would know it if the responsible Cabinet officials were subject to questioning on the floor. Conversely, if the Executive had justification, that much could be made clear through his Cabinet spokesman on the floor.

Moreover, obstructionists were able to add to the confusion by making the bill a catch-all for the bonus, for 16-to-1 silver and other inflation devices, for all sorts of extraneous pet projects. The President would have been obliged either to veto the whole bill or to take the bad in order to get the modicum of good. This is not a new situation. It is only typical.

The result was that the bill was sent back to committee, where it still languishes. Meantime, the Executive is trying to appeal to the country over the heads of Congress or to use patronage and other pressures. The real merits of the matter are lost sight of in what degenerates into a test of political or patronage strength.

• • • •

IF Cabinet members were required to come to the floor of Congress the real merits or demerits of the case could be brought clearly into focus. Backstairs pulling and hauling would largely disappear. Party leaders would not be caught in the awkward position of trying to defend, without adequate information, measures originating with and to be administered by the Executive and his Cabinet. The party in power would be far more closely knit together and responsibility more clearly fixed for the origin as well as the execution of measures. With a selective veto power, the President would be able to cut the bad away from the good in legislation.

In separating the legislative from the executive branch, the founding fathers thought they were creating a safeguard against undue aggrandizement of the executive power. The New Deal has proved how empty that hope was. The separation has tended, instead, toward abdication by Congress, legislation has originated with cliques and groups often remote even from Cabinet supervision. Congress, until now, has repeatedly surrendered its policy-making responsibility—notably in the hot oil case in which the Supreme Court administered a sharp rebuke. It has often been impossible to find out who was back of legislation or why—what the purpose and theory might be.

Committee contact with the executive branch has repeatedly proved ineffective in remedying these and accompanying defects. Only in exceptional cases does the committee process get at the real facts, policies and theories. All too often committee action is perfunctory, and critical opposition is silenced or frustrated.

The suggested corrective measures would hardly eliminate every defect, but they would go far toward curing the most glaring evils so vividly illustrated once again in the fiasco over the relief bill.

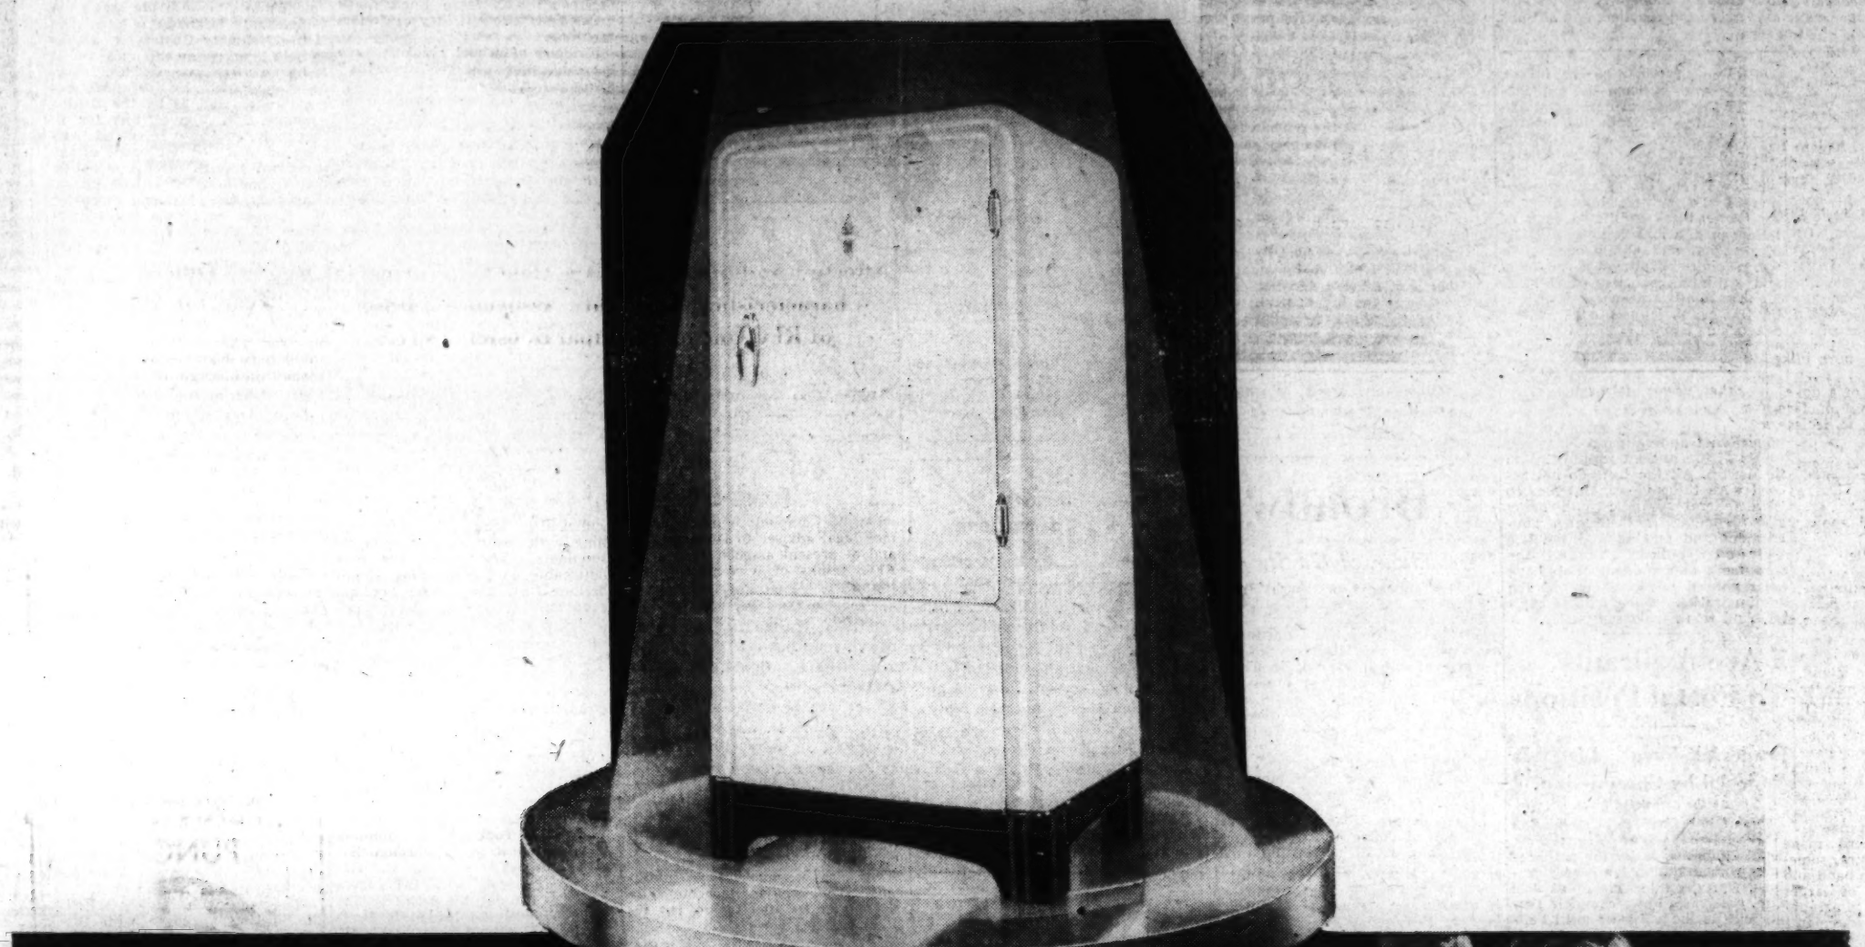
JURIES OF WOMEN HAVE CALLED IT

"The Best Looking of them all!"



Presenting THE NEW 1935 ELECTROLUX Gas REFRIGERATOR

FAVORED FROM THE START BECAUSE IT HAS NO MACHINERY, IS PERMANENTLY SILENT . . . ELECTROLUX NOW LEAPS AHEAD IN BEAUTY!

The designers of the new 1935 Electrolux purposely set out to make it the world's most beautiful refrigeratorl Not to the taste of the manufacturer. Not to please the art critic, but to be the most pleasing note possible for the kitchen in which it will operate for many years. So the distinctive design of the 1935 Electrolux was created by American women themselves! Juries of women examined, criticized, compared designs and miniature models. Their suggestions were incorporated in further designs—submitted again to critical feminine eyes. The result is a refrigerator of unsurpassed beauty PLUS THE SUPERIORITIES OF ELECTROLUX OPERATION WHICH HAVE ALREADY WON OVER SEVEN THOUSAND ENTHUSIASTIC WASHINGTON OWNERS.

The principle of Electrolux makes its operation the simplest system in use today. A tiny gas flame takes the place of all machinery, activating the refrigerant which produces constant, steady cold. Without machinery, Electrolux is vibrationless and noiseless with consequent longer and more dependable service.

See Electrolux before you consider buying any other refrigerator—or call DIstrict 8500 and we will send you complete descriptive literature. Its striking lines and gleaming cabinet will add your vote to the verdict "it's the best looking refrigerator of them all."

AS PRACTICAL AS IT IS BEAUTIFUL

Fast Freezing

Only a touch is needed whenever you wish to speed up the action of Electrolux. It is just as easily activated by turning the control to the proper position. It will defrost itself, then automatically resume normal operation.

Two-way Door Latch

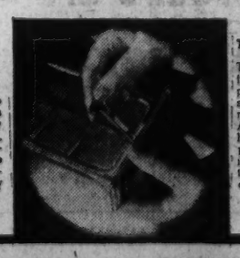
Arriving at the refrigerator with both hands full presents no problem at all with the new Electrolux. Just push an arm lightly against the door handle or lift the latch. It releases either way.

Trigger Tray Release

No pounding or prying are needed to loosen ice cube trays in Electrolux. Simply lift the handy trigger and the most solidly frozen tray releases instantly without effort.

Easy Cube Removal

No problem at all to remove ice cubes from this special tray with its simple, powerful ice cube release. Merely lift the handle and the contents are instantly loosened.



Tilting Shelf

This new Electrolux feature is the simplest, quickest answer to the need for room for tall bottles. A section of shelf is hinged—pivots up to permit bottles to slip into place, then helps to protect them against breakage.

Egg Rack

Electrolux provides an individual compartment for eggs, too. Conveniently stored away in this strong, basket-like rack, they are protected against breakage and easily within reach when you want them.

Parody Words To 'Annabelle' Best Original

Virginia Hustvedt Wins 2 Suppers at Heigh-Ho and Movie Passes.

By Kay Ware.

Hats off to the clever lyricist who wrote a better verse than the original! Meaning Miss Virginia Hustvedt, whose parody on "Fare Thee Well, Annabelle," came through to top place.

As a result, the winner gets two passes to the Earle (loge seats, if you please) to see Rudy Vallee's "Sweet Music," and a supper and champagne cocktails for two at Pete Macias' Heigh-Ho Club.

To the other contestants, thanks for the good lyrics. Unfortunately there could be but one winner. Some parodies, however, had to be eliminated because they wouldn't "sing," or because of faulty rhyming.

Here's Miss Hustevedt's original verse:

As a model of advanced sophistication
You are swell, Annabelle;
But you don't respond to sweet domestication
Very well, Annabelle.
When your vegetables burn like your love,
Though I have the soul of a dove,
Still a charred daily bill of fare, drives your victim to declare,
"Lord above!"

For I've reached a final peak of desperation,
Fare thee well, Annabelle;
Tho' the office force will know my destination,
They won't tell, Annabelle!
On the day you write
You can tempt my appetite
When you ring that dinner-bell . . .
I'll come home again and take you on probation,
Fare thee well, Annabelle!

Lesson No. 4 in the expressions used by musicians—the contribution of Sidney's Orchestra in the Mayflower's lounge.

Stock—An arrangement made by the publishers of a song and printed on the orchestration which is sent to all bands and sold in the music stores. "Stocks" are often very fine, the work of excellent arrangers.

Special—An arrangement made especially for one orchestra, sometimes by a member of the band and sometimes, in the case of larger organizations, by a staff of arrangers. The "special" arrangements are quite often responsible for the success of an orchestra. (Note: Casa Loma, Fred Waring, Eddie Duchin, Guy Lombardo.)

Rhythm section—Developed by jazz, the rhythm section includes the piano, guitar, bass and drums. They make the rhythm. The "reeds," "brasses" and "strings" play the melody.

Slap bass—A bass fiddle player who does not use a bow, but plucks the strings, a practice usual in modern musical aggregations.

Take a chorus—An orchestra leader's direction to a musician or section, which means that their type of music will be featured during one chorus of a tune. It is in that way that orchestras change "stock" arrangements.

Wes Adams and Lisa, who opened at Heigh-Ho last Monday, are a well traveled and popular dance team. They're fast and smooth, doing a paso double, and a whirlwind affair that makes a tornado jealous.

Club Habana bring you the first Washington glimpse of Renato and Rita, Spanish dance duo recently booked at New York Central Park Casino. They've been signed here for five weeks.

Lew Gates and Russ Cullen sing what is newly known as "torch and heart numbers," skillfully backed by Moe Baer and boys.

Susan Hall and Walter Doe, Washington favorites, carry on with tap dances.

There's a magic-man at Madrillon this week who burns dollar bills and pulls things out of his and other folks' sleeves. He's Melbourne Christopher, and has been in the business since he was 6. Merman and Rhea make up the dancing features. They go to extremes in rhythm—very fast or equally slow—what with a jazz rhumba and a "bridal tango."

Tuesday was a big night for Leon Brusiloff. He's leaving the place flat, while he attends a meeting of the "Follow Me Post" of the Foreign Wars Veterans. He'll get an honorary medal.

Hi-Hat hid its light under the topper last week, all because the deep voice of Gordon St. Chad deepened into silence and laryngitis. He's all right now, and the management is relieved.

New color scheme there is cherry red, pearl and blue—red, white and blue to us.

Shoreham held over the "Sweethearts of the Dance"—in other words, Faye and Wellington. Also held over by popular request is their collegiate number. It includes a champagne strut supposed to represent a couple lost on their way home after a celebration.

Talbert Haslett, the barytone and m. c., had a number of visitors who knew him when he was at the Cathedral School for Boys.

Don Lee and Louise, another team, and the "Gypsy Sisters," Asya Kaz and Thalia Zanou, finish the bill.

An unofficial census taken on the q. t. might prove that Ernestine Gardner, singing at the Bamboo Room, will be the most popular girl at Maryland. Joe College visits the lounge every other half hour. That's nothing—the coeds find Fenton Froom charming.

Lots of big ideas, plans, additions and notions are simmering at the Gingham Club. Everyone there is speaking in a half-whisper, their eyes big with excitement.

Well, we'll wait and see.

Lillian Loraine, an acrobatic dancer, is added to the show at Club l'Hiver. The rest of the entertainment consists of Charel de Thomee, the French artist who is making a hit out on Marlboro pike; Rosalie Roy, the dancer; Charles Mayer—in his thirty-third week—and Fran Trapp, the accordionist.

Ethel Pastor, who helped get the Russian Club Troika under way when it opened last fall, is back with new songs, new costumes and an elegant mink coat. Ethel, by the way, will be remembered from her movie shorts and personal theater appearances with Phil Spitalny's band. Most popular number: "Play Gypsy, Dance Gypsy."

Another recent acquisition by Troika's Maestro Matt Windsor is Marian Venable, no stranger to Washington addicts of the dance. She is repeating the most successful number from her Bal Boheme appearance, a routine from the "Persian Market Place."

Lotus' Earl Lindsay revue is on this week, with a total of 16 entertainers. High spots are Frederico and Barbara, dance duo. Bill Strickland, Judy Ellington, Al Norton and the always reliable orchestra are there to serve you music, comedy and song.

La Paree has a show with a cast of nine. Don Lester, singing-dancing m. c., introduces Santino and Leomora, dance team with a waltz and carioca; Marie Fowler and Ray Beck. The vocal stand-bys make new friends—musical and otherwise.

Other new members of the board are Robert Bonde, Dr. B. W. Leonard, J. Harry Cunningham, Harold Doyle, James P. Schick, the Rev. Lawrence W. Shehan, Harry Somerville, Joseph Trew and John Vandergrift. Members of the old board include Isaac Gans, Walter B. Guy, Edward S. Brashears, Dr. Fred V. Coville, Stanley H. Horner, Pyke Johnson, G. Adams Howard, George W. Offutt and George W. White.

Frank and Simple Copy Sells Best, Ad Club Told

A plea for simple and sincere advertising was made by Joseph Katz, head of the Joseph Katz Advertising Agency of Baltimore and New York, before a meeting yesterday of the Advertising Club of Washington.

Mr. Katz, introduced by Norman Kal, president of the club, pointed out that the frank advertising of 50 and 100 years ago had a ring of sincerity and therefore sold more copy.

Lehman Espouses Child Labor Law

Asks Legislature to End Delay by Ratification.

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 26.—A personal appeal by Gov. Lehman today sought to pry the child labor amendment out of legislative committees where it has been shelved by opponents.

Gov. Lehman urged the Legislature speedily to ratify the proposed addition to the Federal Constitution, asserting "ratification is a matter of great magnitude and importance to the State and the Nation."

A Senate committee refused to report the resolution, thereby preventing the upper house from discussing the measure. An Assembly committee has given no indication of what it will do. A few members have declared they would demand it be brought out for debate. The Legislature is Democratic-controlled.

Gov. Lehman's friend and predecessor, President Roosevelt, also urged ratification of the 11-year-old amendment.

Lehman's militant espousal placed him opposite another close friend and a predecessor in the gubernatorial chair, Alfred E. Smith. Former Gov. Smith's opposition was submitted in a statement read at a Senate hearing.

Secretary of Labor Perkins and Postmaster General Farley have urged the Legislature to ratify the amendment.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Broadway at 42d St.

He appeared on three Broadway stages on Sunday night at separate benefit shows. At the Friars' Frolic, he played in two sketches, one with Rudy Vallee, and covered himself with artistic glory. I'm referring, of course, to the former heavyweight champion of the world, Jack Dempsey.

At 2 a. m. Monday I sat with him at his new restaurant, which has become the new sensation of the town. Even at this unseemly hour, people streamed in to order a cup of coffee and a sandwich, anything at all to get the thrill of a Dempsey greeting and his autograph.

The big fellow has a real streak of sentiment in his makeup. The best dish on his menu is named after his wife. And in the foyer sands a bronze bust of Tex Rickard. "I placed it there," said Dempsey, "so that Tex could look across the street at Madison Square Garden, day and night."

• • • •

The Chain Number, finale of the first half of the Casino de Paree show, is eye-filling, to a returning Broadwayite. Slave girls are chained to the column that rises in the center of the stage, and they writhe when an overseer, whip in hand, lashes at them with a bullwhip that crackles like a pistol fire. The adagio dance climax to this number is breathtaking, a girl hurling herself backward in a 12-foot drop to the arms of her partner below. Brian Donlevy, of the original cast of "What Price Glory," saw it from the audience Sunday midnight.

It was the first time that Donlevy had been in this theater since 1928. He was married on the stage, where the slave dancers now cower under the lash. Donlevy was then appearing in "Rainbow." He fell in love with a showgirl in the cast. The company, which included Charlie Ruggles and Libby Holman, insisted that the marriage be held on the stage after a night performance.

Of all the thousands who go to Casino de Paree, I doubt if any one, save Brian Donlevy, can say that on the spot where the adagio dancer hurtles through the air he placed a wedding ring on a girl's finger.

Personal recommendations of the finest comedy sketch in any Broadway theater would be inevitably "The Dance," a five-minute bit of hilarity in Eddie Dowling's show "Thumbs Up." It is a gay lampoon of the Reds, authored by Charles Sherman.

The scene is laid in a printing office, owned by the revolutionary Pascha, played by Eddie Dowling. The equally reddish printing foreman is Sascha, played by Sam Liebert.

To this shop comes Bobby Clark, a meek and mild American, who has been made chairman of the dance committee of his local lodge of Elks. He wants to have posters printed for the forthcoming dance. They ask him what he wants printed on the posters. He suggests mildly that the name of the band should appear: "Joey Ray and His Rhythm Kings." The two Reds scream and froth at the suggestion. "Kings" are taboo. They believe it should be a protest rally with Red slogans. Through it all, the bewildered Clark insists that all his lodge wants to do is dance, shuffling about the stage to give the idea.

'The Best Dog Is'—Wire-Haired Dachshund

Affection and Intelligence Are Held to Be Principal Characteristics of Breed; Associate Counsel of RFC One of Principal Boosters Here.

When Lisa von Wittelsbach has her family next month, the Armstrongs are considering leasing the house next door to their home at 1742 R street northwest, for her and her offspring's special comfort. And that just goes to show what W. Campbell Armstrong, former legal adviser to Dwight Davis and at present associate counsel of RFC, thinks of wire-haired dachshunds.

Lisa, however, was entirely unimpressed by this statement by her mistress and continued to cuddle as closely to the open fire as safety would allow. Kensal Joker, her husband, showed his appreciation by frisking about and being polite to the company as a well-bred English gentleman should do. Yes, Joker, a brindle, rough-coated dachshund, is English, while his wife, with the high-born German name and a beautiful red coat, is American-bred.

"I like the wire-haired dachshund much better than the regular dachshund," Mrs. Armstrong said. "They are so much more intelligent. The regular dachshund, in my opinion, is affectionate, but inclined to be more snappy. As I have three children, I like the rough-coated variety best for that reason. The very first wire-haired dachshund that we saw we fell in love with. We found that this one came from England, so the next time we were there we purchased our first dachshund. Whiskers, as we called him, died, and we had to wait another year before we [illegible] Kensal Joker, a very fine brindle wire-haired, with three champions in his immediate pedigree.

"The original badger hound, from which dachshunds were bred, was rough coated," Mrs. Armstrong continued. "They were bred with smoother coats until the present specimen was achieved. Then, the rough-coated type was desired. Fanciers started to breed back by crossing the dachshund with the Dandie Dinmont Terrier. The result has been a dachshund with a shorter nose, a terrier expression, and a wire-haired coat. In addition, there is also a long-haired dachshund, with a silky long coat produced by crossing the original breed with a Cocker spaniel."

The outstanding characteristics of the standard bred are a dwarfy, short-legged, long-bodied figure with strongly developed muscles. Despite the ill-proportioned appearance of the dog, he should neither look awkward nor crippled. The ears should be well set back, high and broad, the front edges close to the cheek, nicely rounded; the eyes medium in size, oval, with clear, energetic expression; the neck sufficiently long, muscular, running with beautiful lines into the shoulders. The trunk, the most noticeable part of the dog, should be long, fully muscled, with oblique shoulders and hips. The rough-coated type is now a pretty stable variety. Their special desideratum is a strong, wiry, workmanlike coat.

RUTH MANSFIELD.

2 Damage Actions Here Seek Total of $30,000

Two damage suits, seeking an aggregate of $30,000, were filed in the District Supreme Court yesterday.

Edwin D. Tucker, 1346 Columbia road northwest, asked, through Attorneys James R. Murphy and Arthur J. Hilland, for $25,000 from Lea K. Engle, 4514 Connecticut avenue northwest, alleged driver of an automobile that struck and injured him at Fourteenth street and Park road northwest, October 26, 1934.

Edwin J. Callan, 1400 Lawrence street northwest, sought $5,000 for injuries suffered when an automobile operated by Wilson C. Wilmot, 1639 Columbia road northwest, collided with him at Ninth and K streets northwest February 22, 1934. Attorney Robert R. Faulkner filed the suit.

Reserve Officer Given Year for CCC Theft

Joyner was given a dishonorable discharge from the Army and sentenced to one year at hard labor. He was confined to Fort George C. Meade until his case has been reviewed by the President and the prison designated. He formerly lived in Washington.

Court Upholds Refusal To Issue Beer License

The Alcohol Beverage Control board was upheld in its refusal to issue an "on-sale" beer license to Harry Ballos, proprietor of a restaurant at 317 Cedar street, Takoma Park, yesterday when Chief Justice A. A. Wheat, in the District Supreme Court, declined to order the board to grant a permit.

Ballos, through Attorney William J. Hughes, jr., had asked a court order compelling the issuance of a license to him. He contended that under the District liquor law the "neighborhood" clause of the law entitled him to a license, because, he said, the residents in the vicinity were in favor of the granting of the license.

Mrs. Bolton Is Hostess At Large Tea

Official, Diplomatic, Press and Residential Sets Represented.

Guests Hear Program of Piano Selections by Frauenheim.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Mrs. Chester C. Bolton, wife of Representative Bolton, of Ohio, and a noted hostess, gave a tea yesterday afternoon at their home on Wyoming avenue. From 4:30 until 6:30 o'clock guests, who included officials, diplomats, members of residential society and officers of the Women's National Press Club and the Newspaper Women's Club, gathered there to enjoy music, conversation and a cup of tea.

In the drawing rooms the guests sat in informal groups before the open fire or around the piano where Mr. Paul Frauenheim, well-known pianist, was seated. He played several groups of selections by famous composers, including the "Fire Dance" by the Spanish composer, de Falla. The room itself is a delightful place for any function, furnished with brocaded chairs and sofa in soft shades and hung with several fine portraits, probably of ancestors of Representative and Mrs. Bolton. Spring flowers in silver holders and colorful lamps with Oriental bases of crystal, jade, rose quartz and coral added color to the room, as did the window shades of terra cotta and the curtains of lemon yellow silk.

Hostess Sings Ballads.

Mrs. Bolton wore an afternoon frock of soft henna crystelle velvet embroidered with bands of gold thread, earrings of carnelian, which matched the gown, and a long strand of gold filigree beads. The surprise of the afternoon was when several of the guests requested the hostess to sing. Many did not even know that she possesses a lovely, rich voice until she obligingly sang several ballads. Mrs. Henry C. Rowland accompanied her at the piano.

Later the guests adjourned to the dining room for tea and there found a flower decked table spread with a variety of sandwiches and cakes, hot biscuits with a delicious filling, and twists of toast with cheese.

Others at Reception.

Others glimpsed in the group were Mme. Prochnik, wife of the Minister of Austria, wearing a black frock embroidered with tiny gold figures and a high Russian turban. The Minister and Mme. Prochnik will go to Philadelphia next week to visit for several days. Nearby was pretty Frau Scholz, blonde wife of the First Secretary of the German Embassy, who wore a gown of brown woolen with a pert little velvet hat trimmed with mink tails. Others there were Miss Diane Rowland, daughter of Mrs. Henry C. Rowland, who was among the season's debutantes, wearing a frock of dark red-and-white print with a small brown hat; Miss Anne Randolph and Miss Mary Randolph, both wearing smart black frocks with black hats and scarfs of silver fox furs; Mrs. William Fitch Kelley, also wearing black, and Mrs. Frank W. Mondell, wife of Representative Mondell.

Hosiery Buyers Now Are Sure Of Perfect Fit

By Ruth Anne Davis.

MAY WONDERS never cease! First it was hats, designed on our heads, next it was girdles that restrained our curves and reduced them, too. Now it's hose actually made to measure in width, length and foot size.

It sounds too good to be true, doesn't it? But if you're dubious, call at a certain downtown store and ask for proof.

You'll see some remarkable stockings made in four different proportions, for small, medium, tall, and plump women. Each proportion is individually fashioned so that the stocking fits both the leg and the foot perfectly.

Isn't it grand to find stockings with leg sizes? Just think, no more funny creases at the knee, nor wretched wrinkles at the ankle! No frantic searching for the longest or shortest stocking in the box.

The short woman with the stoutest legs won't have to buy miles-too-long hose to insure a fit. And the tall woman with skinny legs won't have to cramp her style in order to buy hose that are tight enough but inches short.

Incidentally, it's very easy to get just your proportion when you buy these stockings. Each of the four leg sizes has a name. All you do is ask for your foot size by number, and your leg size by name—and there you are with a pair of hose that fit to perfection.

Hooked Rug Knitters.

Queen Mary is reputed to have said "very lovely" when she saw the demonstration of a brand new hooked rug knitter. Hundreds of Washington women have been exclaiming enthusiastically as they watched the salesman make a round of the rug in record time.

It is an ingenious device. A queer looking needle with strange wooden handles. But, my! what it can do! With its aid you can make a hooked rug in a few hours, regardless of materials.

The demonstrator was using some scraps from a chiffon dress, some tweed from a topcoat, some knitting yarn and a heterogeneous collection of woolen strips taken from goodness knows what.

These he attached to the needle and then in and out, in and out, at least ten "in and outs" to a second, thanks to the mechanical movement of the needle. Presto, before you know it, there's your hooked rug completed, and looking for the life like a colonial show piece.

Soap Becomes News.

A large local store and one of Washington's favorite shopping centers is to be congratulated upon its new and alert young buyer for the toilet goods department.

A crowning example of his peculiar talents, lies, believe it or not, in some soap which he is now featuring.

Some people would have said, poof, there's no news in soap. But he didn't. He believed you could make soap into news, and the type of news shoppers would be glad to hear. So here's what he did. He sent a sample of Washington water to an outstanding chemical concern and asked them to create a soap which was particularly adapted to this water.

But that's not all. He wanted a soap that would do outstanding things, so under his directions this soap was made into two batches, one of which was blended with a cold cream and one with a cleansing cream.

Just why? Use the soap and you'll understand. At night the cleansing cream soap does a double job of cleansing; it does all that cream and all that soap can. In the morning, use the cold cream soap. It softens your skin, wards off dryness and prevents chapping.

Even without all these special qualities the soap would be a shopper's favorite, for it comes in lovely pastel colors and 24 cakes sell for $1.

Card Table Covers.

A perfect playing surface is provided by the superfine card table cover selling all this week for only 78 cents.

It's a suede fabric that fits the top of the table like a glove. You'll like it for that reason and also because cards won't slide on it, nor glasses stain it. It's available in tan, red, green and blue.

Gilt Edge Playing Cards.

While you are considering this bargain give a thought also to another—four packs of gilt edge playing cards for only $1.

When you examine the quality of these and then others which cost much more you'll marvel at this modest price. Appearance, too, goes a long way in a playing card, and you can look the town over and find no more attractive designs than you'll find on these.

"When you've washed your silken hose, hang them firmly by the toes" to one of the handy little hose hangers featured in the notions section of a downtown store. Each hanger has several little clothes pins which attach firmly to your hose. Don't worry, the pins are rust-proof and snag-proof and there's no danger of their loosening and letting the hose fall to the floor to become soiled again.

Yellowstone Guide Finds Women Most Troublesome

Many a sightseer in Yellowstone Park has been guided up the steep Old Faithful nature trail by this young botanist, Mrs. Herma Albertson Baggley, who is now in Washington. Mrs. Baggley is one of the few women ever to be employed by the Government as Yellowstone guides.

Mrs. Herma Baggley, Here on Her First Trip East, Thinks Americans Are Greatest Souvenir Hunters in World.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

WHEN SIGHTSEERS trudge through Yellowstone Park it's the middle-aged women who just can't resist picking a souvenir flower now and then, although posy plucking is strictly against park rules. In fact, it's women of all ages who cause a guide the most trouble, Mrs. Herma Albertson Baggley admitted yesterday.

For two years Mrs. Baggley was the only Government-employed guide in all Yellowstone. She helped lay out the Old Faithful nature trail and for three years was the only person to lead groups over that two-and-a-half mile stretch.

Yesterday she sat in the apartment at 2100 I street northwest where she and Mr. Baggley are staying during their few months in Washington, and recalled her experiences among the geysers.

Two Petrified Trees Taken Away.

"My stay in the park convinced me Americans are the greatest souvenir hunters in the world," she laughed. "Why, they carried off two whole petrified trees bit by bit before a law was passed forbidding visitors to take anything away with them. But even now there are always a few women, invariably middle-aged, who think one little blossom won't be missed. The strange part of it is they usually get conscience stricken and confess to the guide. And then the guide doesn't know just what to do."

Aside from their souvenir hunting activities, women are a problem to the guide because most of them come to the park without suitable clothes.

"They wear high heels and tight skirts and silk stockings," Mrs. Baggley said. "So, of course, they're uncomfortable and forced to move slowly on the trail. We climb about 300 feet and the way, is rough as well as steep. A lot of high heels have been lost on that trail. And I hate to think of all the silk stockings that have been torn into shreds."

Many Find Romance.

But, in spite of their discomfort, many of the women, who have climbed to Old Faithful, have found romance along the way. Mrs. Baggley knows of several instances in which chance meetings on the trail have led to marriage. Girls who didn't find romance in men sightseers usually found it in Mrs. Baggley's job.

In every group, according to Mrs. Baggley, there were always a few who said, "My, it must be wonderful to be a guide. You meet so many interesting people. And then there are all those good-looking park rangers."

Well, the job was wonderful, Mrs. Baggley declared. She gets as big a thrill out of the geysers today as she did when she went to the park nine years ago. As for the park rangers—she married one of them three years ago. Mr. Baggley is now chief ranger in Yellowstone. Mrs. Baggley resigned from her own position a year ago. But she still lives in the park.

"Some of our neighbors," she said, "have told my husband and me they think we're awful queer. Whenever we have any time off, instead of going to Livingston to the movies we wander about in Yellowstone. It's so big and contains so much of interest that we're still busy exploring it."

The job of guide is difficult for a woman, is the opinion of Mrs. Baggley. She had a hard time convincing park officials she could do the work.

"I finally began as a pillow-puncher for the Camps Co.," she said.

A pillow-puncher, she explained, is a person who makes beds and cleans cabins in exchange for room and board. Mrs. Baggley, at that time Miss Albertson, had been teaching botany at the University of Idaho. She knew she could make good as a guide if given a chance. So after her pillow-punching duties were over for the day, she worked at laying out the Old Faithful nature trail and practiced shouting through a megaphone so she could give lectures as her party climbed the steep path to the geyser.

The first party she guided consisted of three persons. Later she took as many as 350 at a time. Three years after she began as a guide she and Marguerite Lindsley Arnold were given appointments as ranger naturalists. Mrs. Arnold was a permanent ranger before Mrs. Baggley came to Yellowstone. In 1931 Mrs. Baggley was made junior park naturalist.

She and her husband will return to the West about April 1.

"This is my first trip to the East and I'm enjoying it immensely," Mrs. Baggley said. "But I guess I'll be ready to go back by April. They say that anyone who has ever worked in Yellowstone has a hankering to return there in the spring."

What Today Means

"Pisces."

IF February 27 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 3:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. and from 10:30 p. m. until midnight.

Good manners should pay excellent dividends on this date. Politeness may be the standard through which will be judged the claims one makes of being well bred. Rudeness may prove a magnet for trouble, so the wise will avoid resorting to it. February 27 should be a good day for shopping, as well as other forms of trading.

If a woman, and February 27 is your birthday, water has probably an unusually strong attraction for you. Boating, skating and swimming are sports in which you should excel. It is likely to be advantageous for you to exercise the greatest amount of discrimination in the selection of the books you read. You should confine your choice of literature to volumes worthy of the time and effort expanded in their perusal.

If a man, and February 27 is your natal day; you need out-of-door activities to keep young mentally, as well as physically, in topmost form. If you will avoid worrying over trifles, you may be surprised to find how much more you can accomplish. Hunting and fishing will not only provide amusement, but also the type of exercise which may prove the best for you. You should be capable of writing excellent prose or verse. The stage, medical or legal profession, as well as work of an educational or commercial nature, might be the most suitable from which to select a career.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

When Man Shows Girl Every Consideration, Defers to Her Every Wish, Yet Never Speaks of Love, Does He Love Her?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: For five months I have been going with a young man who gives me every reason to suppose he loves me except that he has never actually said so. Do you think it's because he is afraid if he did, it might spoil our wonderful friendship? I care a great deal for him, more than I ever have for any man, but until he gives me some indication of how he feels toward me, I don't think it proper to reveal my true feelings, do you?

* * * *

He never shows the least interest in other girls, but that may be because he doesn't know other girls here. He came to Washington six months ago, and works for the same firm I do. He is very quiet and rather shy, but quite self possessed. He shows me every consideration, always defers to my wishes in every respect, and when his father and mother came on here to visit him a month ago, took me to lunch with them and to a show that evening.

* * * *

The nearest he has ever come to making a declaration of love was one evening some time ago, after we had had several drinks at the home of friends. On the way home he said: "What's the use of fooling ourselves with this pal racket. We know we're in love with each other. Why don't we admit it?" But the next day he said, almost as if in apology: "I guess I had one too many drinks last night. If I said anything out of the way, just excuse it on that ground, will you?" That must have been what he was referring to, and it hurt me terribly.

* * * *

What is your opinion, Miss Haworth? Do you think he really loves me, and for some reason feels he can't say so. Both of us are 25, and both of us have high ideals of friendship and about life generally. Please give me your advice.

UNSURE.

Intuition Best Guide.

DEAR UNSURE: Wiseacres have said when a man begins to wonder if he's in love, he usually is; whereas when like uncertainty besets a woman she usually isn't.

Probably your young man is more than half in love with you, at least. But being a high-principled, self-contained person with a yen for certitude in all things, he hesitates at committing himself to the spoken word until all of his doubts have been swept away.

* * * *

It may be that falling in love just now was no part of his plan for his budding career. He may be one of those bright young men who believe "he travels fastest who travels alone," and consequently is determined to resist to the last ditch any betraying emotional inclination to take on excess baggage in the form of fiancee or wife. Perhaps romance and marriage were the farthest things from his mind, until he met you.

* * * *

A woman has to depend very largely on her intuition in divining a man's essential feeling for her, regardless of words. Love-making is a frivolous pastime for some men, who delight in pouring impassioned declarations into the ear of every personable girl they meet. A proposal from such a man should be accepted in the spirit in which it is given—in other words, it should be allowed to go in one ear and out the other.

* * * *

Other men feel, with the poet, Shelley, that "one word is too often profaned for me to profane it, one feeling too falsely disdained for thee to disdain it . . ." and in consequence, their reluctance to voice their love for a given woman increases in direct ratio to the genuineness and intensity of the emotion entertained. Such men are few, I dare say, but theirs, perhaps, is the love most worth having.

* * * *

If there is basic wisdom underlying the Latin proverb, "In vino veritas," which, freely translated, means "there's truth in wine," your young man came perilously near to an avowal of love the night he had one drink too many. I don't say he is "really in love with you," but I believe he's falling in love.

M. H.

Undergraduate Marriages Get Deans' Approval

Undergraduate marriages which do not create "an undesirable social situation" were given the general approval of deans attending the recent convention of the National Association of Deans of Women held in Atlantic City. The deans stipulated, however, that the marriages should be favored by the students' parents and that financial aid from home should be given the married couples. The deans suggested that the couples set up housekeeping rather than continue to live apart until graduation.

Disappearance of the flapper from college campuses was reported by Miss Agnes Alice Harris, of the University of Alabama; who is president of the association.

Neckpieces Designed to Give Dresses a New Lease on Life

Pattern No. 884.

MANY A DRESS has been given a new lease on life by "collar treatment." These four bits of neckwear were designed to meet any neckline need. One of them will effectively hide an old bodice section. Two of them are soft frilly collars eminently suitable for spring. The other is for a dress with a V-neck.

Just eight pieces make all of these and the yardage required for each is very small, so they will be economical to make. The sizes are small (32 and 34), medium (36 and 38), and large (40 and 42). Yardage requirements are on the pattern envelope.

Clothes Create the Mood Of Era, Miss Sands Thinks

Star Reveals How She Started Acting Without Benefit of Cast.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

CLOTHES have a psychological effect on an individual, thinks Miss Dorothy Sands, who recently presented her "one-man" show in Washington and stayed over a couple of days to visit friends.

"A girl in a short skirt, flat-heeled shoes and a sweater with beret to match not only walks differently from a girl in a long, flowing evening dress, but she actually talks and thinks differently," Miss Sands said yesterday at the home of her hostess, Mrs. William Gower.

So you can help capture the mood of a period by donning apparel fashionable in that era, Miss Sands explained. This is one way she has recreated the 1820s', the '70's, '80's and '90's for her shows, which have blazed a new trail in the theatrical realm.

One of the three women who have founded and developed this new branch of acting, Dorothy Sands came to it by way of the stage. Cornelia Otis Skinner, whose dramatic sequences have been widely acclaimed, and Ruth Draper, whose impersonations have proved delightful to many audiences, were monologists first. But Dorothy Sands chose a stage career with no thought of going into monodrama.

Discussing her work, she told something of how she started performing without benefit of a supporting cast.

Studied Customs and Costumes.

"Acting should be an interpretation of a period," she said. "While I was with the Neighborhood Players, it struck me many actors lacked background and understanding of the periods they were trying to recreate. The result was I began doing much research, learning about the customs, costumes and mannerisms of each era to see if I could bring them to life on the stage.

That eventually led to Miss Sands' first "one-man" show, "Styles in Acting," which was first prepared for a small performance in New York.

"I had no idea I'd ever go on the stage with it," she laughed. But when she did, the show was so well received she was soon planning another—the one she presented here Sunday night.

"Now I'm working on still an other," she confided. "And that mean's I'm spending every spare minute in libraries doing research. When that's finished, I'll plan costumes, then work out the acts. Putting on the show, finally, involves much more, you see, than just the acting."

Show a 'Terrible Strain.'

Her performances are "one-man" projects in every respect. She checks everything—the lights, the properties, the costumes. With but a minute and a half between scenes to change and strike a pose before the next curtain goes up, she admits an evening's performance is "a terrific strain."

But she likes it, she admits. "Instead of a supporting cast, the people on the other side of the footlights become my partner for two hours and a half," she said. "Then, too, doing so many different characterizations keeps one flexible."

"A real impersonation is so much more than it appears on the surface. It is at once a presentation of another individual and your own comment. In other words, an impersonation shows better than anything else exactly what you think of the person—favorably, or otherwise."

Did she think, in view of her success in this field, she would ever go back to the stage?

"I haven't any plans," she said. "I never look far ahead. Life swings me in one direction and then another."

Began With "47 Workshop."

It would seem life, so far, has done very well by this girl with clear blue eyes, a musical voice and a dip in the center of her upper lip you can't foget, once you've talked with her.

A student at Radcliffe, she began her career as an actress with the famous "47 Workshop." From there she went to New York and in her own words, "got a break"—the leading role in the road production of "The Children of the Moon."

That finished, she joined the Neighborhood Playhouse, starred in a number of plays and was a hit in the "Grand Street Follies." Which led, eventually, to a new and delightful type of "one-man" show.

Underwood & Underwood.

How To KEEP WELL

Disease Producing Viruses.

AS has been pointed out in the preceding articles, many diseases have been found to be due to specific organisms, as, for example, typhoid fever, tuberculosis, diphtheria, etc. In addition there are certain forms of life now called viruses, or filterable viruses, which are responsible for many diseases affecting man, animals and plants. Inasmuch as these viruses, although living things, are too small to be seen by even the most powerful microscope, they can not be identified or described. We can learn about them only through studying their habits—what they do and how they behave.

Pasteur showed in 1880 that rabies (hydrophobia) was due to something that could not be seen with a microscope. He was unable to grow this substance as he did bacteria, and concluded that the causative factor was an invisible virus. Today between 20 and 30 diseases that affect man are laid on the doorstep of the virus group. Among these are yellow fever, cold sores on the lips and shingles (herpes), smallpox, poliomyelitis, encephalitis, measles and perhaps influenza and the common cold. In animals foot and mouth disease is attributed to a virus, and in plants a disease of tobacco that produces a mosaic appearance on the leaf.

Man is infected with many of these viruses by means of insects. Yellow fever is spread through the bite of a certain species of mosquito. It is not the injury resulting from the bite that causes the disease, but the insect, having sucked blood containing virus from a yellow fever patient, introduces some of this material into its victim.

Oyster Dishes Will Feature Lenten Menus

Housewives Are Advised to Buy Them in Shells Preferably.

By Dorothea Duncan.

SOME ONE should ring out an appeal for more oyster dishes. The persons who enjoy oysters will want them now, plenty of them. Though April may seem remote, it isn't and it does sound the death knell of the oyster until next fall.

Oysters will be the saving grace to many a menu during the coming Lenten season when meat is frequently taboo.

Remember that oysters, to be a safe and palatable food, must be fresh. Buy them in the shells, if possible. If you buy them without the shells, be sure the liquor is clear. A cloudy liquor means that the oyster is not fresh enough to be used.

Opening an oyster shell correctly can come only with practice. However, it is never too late to learn, so try it this way. Hold the oyster, firmly with the thick part of the shell toward the palm of the hand. Wash the shell thoroughly. Push a strong knife (the blade must be thin), between the shells near the back and run it along until it cuts the strong muscle which holds the shells together. Drop the oysters into a strainer, set over a bowl, and save the liquor that drains through to be used in cooking the oysters or making soup or sauce. Then examine each oyster and with the fingers remove all particles of shell. They are then ready to be used in any way desired.

Shirred Oysters and Mushrooms.

1 dozen oysters
1½ cups milk
3 tablespoons flour
1 or 2 teaspoons anchovy paste
1 dozen large mushrooms
3 tablespoons butter
¼ teaspoon grated onion
Paprika
Salt and lemon juice

Cut rounds of toast in 2 or 2½-inch circles and arrange in a shallow baking dish. Place large peeled mushroom caps on the toast. Dip oysters in melted butter seasoned with salt, lemon juice and paprika and lay on mushrooms, using enough butter to season mushrooms also. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.), until mushrooms are tender and oysters are cooked. Make a thin white sauce of milk, butter and flour, season with onion and anchovy and color with vegetable bouquet. Pour around toast and serve.

Dinner Menu.

Tomato Juice Cocktail
Baked Oysters With Spaghetti
Buttered Spinach
Sliced Onion and Orange Salad
With French Dressing
Brown Bread and Butter
Lemon Meringue Pie
Coffee Milk (for children)

Baked Oysters With Spaghetti.

¼ pound spaghetti
1 pint oysters
Salt and pepper
1 cup bread crumbs
1½ cups milk
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons butter or other fat
½ cup melted fat

Break the spaghetti into small pieces, boil it in plenty of salted boiling water until it is quite tender, and then drain. Scald the oysters in their own liquor, reserving the liquor. Oil a baking disk, put in a layer of the spaghetti and then a layer of the oysters, season with salt and pepper, and repeat the layers until all the oysters and spaghetti are used, finishing with a layer of spaghetti. To the liquor from the oysters add enough milk to make a pint, reserving a small quantity to mix with the flour. Scald the remainder, add the scalded milk to the moistened flour, stir well, and cook 20 minutes in a double boiler. Take from the fire, add the melted fat and pour over the layers in the dish. Top with bread crumbs mixed with melted fat and bake in a quick oven (400-450 degrees Fahrenheit), just long enough to brown the crumbs—about 10 minutes.

House Kills Car-Tag Bill In Maryland

Unfavorable Report of Committee Adopted to Kill Measure.

$2,500,000 Bond Issue by State Road Body Is Proposed.

By Francis O. White, Jr.,
A Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 26.—Killing the bill designed to place a flat rate of $2 on automobile license tags, introduction of two administration measures—one authorizing the State roads commission to issue $2,500,000 bonds, and the other to continue in force the teachers salary reduction law—a bill to create a State board of eugenics to control sterilization of inmates in State institutions, a proposal to make the sale of ice cream by weight, instead of measure, and advancement of a number of other measures in the respective houses, marked today's session of Maryland's General Assembly.

The $2 auto tag proposal had short life in the House. Introduced by Delegate Allen Clark, Anne Arundel County, it came from the ways and means committee with an unfavorable report, and the report was adopted overwhelmingly, after unsuccessful efforts were made to recommit for further consideration. Two dollar tags was a plank in Gov. Nice's platform, but the executive soon realized that the proposal would be impracticable because of the State's financial condition and he abandoned it. Notwithstanding this move, some of the Republicans in the Assembly persisted putting the bill forward anyhow.

Two Administration Bills.

Senator David J. Balle (Republican), Carroll County, sponsored the two administration bills. The proposed bond issue would be for general road and bridge construction, while under the teachers' salary bill, instructors in public schools would continue under the reduction ranging from 10 per cent on salaries of $1,200, to 15 per cent for $3,600 or more.

The eugenics bills is a request measure presented in the House by the Frederick County delegation. Under its terms the control board would consist of the State Director of Welfare, State Director of Health and the president of the medical and chirurgical faculty. Superintendents of the various State institutions would be authorized to recommend patients for sterilization.

Delegate J. Walter Mitchell, Caroline County, sponsored the State-wide proposal to regulate the sale of ice cream by weight. The bill directs manufacturers to deliver their product to retailers by weight, and when sold to the consumer, all containers will be required to show net weight.

"Maryland, My Maryland."

James Ryder Randall's version of "Maryland, My Maryland," advanced a step further toward legalization as the State's anthem, when the Senate passed the bill by Senator J. Allan Coad, St. Marys County, urging its adoption. Bills embracing four other compositions of the song were placed on the legislative files, once the campaign was inaugurated, but the Randall version apparently has the inside track.

The bill to make the maximum speed of automobiles on State highways 45 miles, also moved forward, the Senate adopting the proposal by Senator Robert V. Cooksey, Charles County.

A large delegation of Negroes appeared before the Senate Education Committee and urged passage of the bill equalizing salaries of white and colored school teachers. The committee's view is that equalization can not be effected immediately as asked in the bill, for financial reasons, but indications are that it will be spread over a three-year period.

Measures in Senate.

Permitting nonresidents to take clams from waters of Worcester County without first obtaining a license as now required; three bills embracing local legislation for Trappe, Talbot County, one revising the tax law, another fixing the pay of the town commissioners and a third authorizing the county treasurer to collect taxes on automobiles owned in the town; two by Senator Melvin L. Fine, Baltimore City, one relating to the rank of police officers assigned to the juvenile court, and the other authorizing the use of more voting machines in elections; by Senator J. Allan Coad, St. Marys County, regulating the distribution of State reports by providing that they be given to the department of legislative reference, which will in turn exchange with or distribute to libraries and other institutions.

The Senate adopted, under suspension of rules, a resolution requesting the State banking commissioner to furnish information pertaining to operations of petty loan companies. This was the third proposal of the kind offered in the Senate by Senator Kimble, Allegany County, as data previously submitted was held insufficient.

Sale of Annuity.

The Senate passed the bill by Senator Coad, authorizing the sale of the State's annuity in the Northern Central Railway, capitalized on a 4 per cent basis, the proceeds to be used to reduce the State debt.

The Senate also passed the following measures:

Bill by Senator Ernest Miller, regulating the issuance of contracts by the Washington County commissioners, by providing that no commissioner shall have any pecuniary interest in contract awards, and placing $500 as the minimum limit of contracts without first advertising for bids; bill by Senator Milton L. Veasey, Worcester County, authorizing hunting and fishing on lands formed by channel excavations in Sinepuxent, Isle of Wight and Chincoteague bays, and declaring the islands natural resources of the State title to which shall be retained by the conservation department; Senator Robert Kimble's bill directing the automobile commissioner to refuse licenses in Cumberland, unless taxes have been paid; bill by Senator Robert Cookser, regulating sale of intoxicants in Charles County; bill by Senator Harry Le Gore, exempting the Emmitsburg Railroad from taxes for two years.

New proposals received by the House included these:

Reducing the salary of the chairman of the industrial accident commission from $6,000 to $5,500; by William R. Howard, Baltimore County, authorizing the commissioner of motor vehicles to increase the department from 20 to 100, with equipment of motorcycles or other vehicles; by Delegate Samuel Brohawn, directing the motor vehicle commissioner to refuse auto tags to car owners in Cambridge unless taxes are paid; by Earl Bennett, providing for collection of Dorchester County taxes in four installments; by Harry Holzapel, Washington County, prohibiting the erection of "spite" fences, under penalty of $25, and making 8 feet the maximum height of all fences.

Warns of Crisis

ARTHUR M. FIELD.

Field Reports A Relief Crisis At Winchester

Possible Loss of $8,000 and Duplication of Work Blamed.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 26.—City Manager Arthur M. Field said today Winchester had arrived at a relief crisis.

The city manager said the expected emergency was the result of the probable withdrawal of approximately $8,000 in Federal aid heretofore available to the city coupled with a duplication of local effort.

Mr. Field appeared before a recently created welfare advisory board yesterday with data showing "five or six organizations are doing the same kind of work. Duplicating their efforts as a result of having no central control."

"This problem is aggravated by the fact that in addition to the money expended, direct relief soon will be thrown back on the community," the city manager said.

"This will mean unless an additional amount is supplied by the city or by private contributions, direct relief activities will have to be largely curtailed or cut off," he continued.

He said funds from Federal sources amounted to about $8,000.

"Unless duplication is stopped and the work centralized loss of this fund will make an insufferable burden for the community," he concluded.

Program Ordered.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 26 (AP).—Instructions were given today to Virginia emergency relief administration officials to begin work immediately on formulating an extended program of work relief for the various localities for the month of March.

William A. Smith, VERA director, instructed relief administration officials in cities, towns and counties to start the work promptly since it is contemplated that the bulk of the VERA allotments for March will be earmarked only for work relief projects, with few exceptions.

Bell to Hear Date of Trial On March 7

Judge to Set Date for Poisoning Case as Court Opens.

Accused to Be Returned to Fredericksburg Tomorrow.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 26.—The date for the second trial of Edward C. Bell, 60-year-old churchman, on wife poisoning charges will be set on March 7, opening day of the regular term of Corporation Court, Judge Frederick W. Coleman announced today.

City Sergt. J. C. Chichester, on an order entered in Corporation Court this morning by Judge Coleman, will leave early tomorrow for the Southwestern State Hospital, at Marion, to bring Mr. Bell back to Fredericksburg. The return trip of 311 miles will be begun early Thursday and the accused, in company with Sergt. Chichester, is expected to arrive in Fredericksburg late Thursday afternoon.

Plans may be made by defense counsel to have Mr. Bell released on bond upon his immediate arrival in this city. If not, Sergt. Chichester said Mr. Bell would be confined in the city jail, where he spent the night after being ordered committed to the Marion institution by Judge Coleman at the conclusion of his trial, in which a deadlocked jury voted seven for conviction and five for insanity. Judge Coleman's order for the return of Mr. Bell directs that he be conveyed "to the jail of this court."

Four State alienists, in a report to Judge Coleman yesterday, said after a 60-day examination they had found that Mr. Bell now is sane. In a letter to Judge Coleman, Dr. George A. Wright, superintendent of the Marion Hospital, said that Mr. Bell was in poor physical health and that his health is "obviously declining."

No indication has been given by defense counsel of contemplated procedure in behalf of their client.

Liquor Profit Tax Is Sought

Virginia Faces Loss of Nearly $500,000 to Government.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Feb. 26.—Virginia is fighting vigorously the possibility of losing nearly half a million dollars in liquor profits demanded by the Federal Government in income taxes.

State fiscal officers say defeat in Congress will mean the localities' share of Alcoholic Beverage Control Board profits for the first year of operation will be reduced drastically.

Members of the A. B. C. Board say if a proposed amendment to the income tax law does not prevail it probably will result in sacrificing the Commonwealth's most effective club over bootlegger competition.

In the fight the Old Dominion is allied with nearly a dozen other liquor monopoly States from which the Federal Bureau of Internal Revenue is seeking approximately $4,000,000 taxes on profits. Among these States are Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Iowa, Montana, Washington and Oregon.

The revenue department has held that a State liquor monopoly is not essentially a Government function, and therefore it should be taxed as a corporation, at the rate of 13¾ per cent on its profits.

The State has announced that if it pays the bill it will pay under protest, and meanwhile Virginia has joined with other States in backing amendment to the income tax law, exempting the State liquor monopolies' profits from Federal income taxes.

Delp Captured; Jailed to Wait Trial in Slaying

Accused of Knife Murder of Police Chief Martin in Galax, Virginia.

By the Associated Press.

Galax, Va., Feb. 26.—Howard Delp, accused slayer, was back in custody today after a four-day manhunt through Carroll and Grayson Counties. Tracked by dogs urged on by officers and deputized citizens, Delp was driven across the North Carolina line yesterday and still later captured at a point near Wilksboro, 30 miles from the line and west of Winston-Salem.

Three Galax officers made the arrest.

Delp was brought back to Galax, where a murder charge is standing against him. He is accused of the knife-murder of Chief of Police Posey Martin. Delp and a man named Dowe Leonard shared a cell in Galax Jail last Thursday, arrested for drunkenness.

Leonard had arranged bail and Chief Martin, with Officer Frank Dotson, opened the door to free him. Delp attempted to force his way out and when the officers pushed him back he drew a small knife and attacked them. Chief Martin was stabbed in the neck and the jugular vein severed. He died within a few minutes.

Delp fled and Leonard was released. A few hours later the latter man was dead himself—shot three times as he sought admittance to a house occupied by Jim Brady. Brady is being held for the killing. Delp vanished in the mountain country in the Fancy Gap area and for four days dogs and armed men sought him in vain.

Reports persisted, however, that he had been seen and officers and deputized citizens drew closer to his hiding place. Last night he crossed the State line with officers close behind him. They cornered him at Wilksboro and made the arrest.

Along the Tri-State Trail

with

C. B. Carr

Post State Editor

EVEN though ballads tell us that there is "no place like home," two Fredericksburg, Va., inebriates took exception to the rule recently and mistook the police headquarters for their respective domiciles.

Sunday night after they had had "a few short ones" and were on the way home—each showing the other the way—the trail led to the imposing portal of the city lockup.

A second operation, to be performed at Johns Hopkins Hospital this week, is expected to give sight to Clayton Morrison, Hagerstown, Md., who has been almost totally blind since birth.

Coe Jenkins, of Braxton County, W. Va., is the stepson and also the great-grandfather of his own son.

Alva Jenkins, the son, married the former Mrs. Emory Riffle, who has by her first marriage a daughter whom Coe Jenkins married as his second wife. Alva Jenkins thus became stepson-in-law to his stepdaughter and stepfather-in-law of his own father.

When a daughter was born to Coe Jenkins and his second wife, Alva Jenkins became a step-grandfather of the child of his own father. Coe Jenkins became step-great-grandfather of his own child and Alva a half brother of the child of his own father as well as step-grandfather.

Even if the 100 persons in Richmond who bought tickets on the Canadian lottery drew winners it won't do them much good.

The purchasers were notified by the Postoffice officials yesterday that the packet containing the chance ducats had been seized. Importation of such matter is forbidden by law. The confiscated pasteboards made up the largest batch ever received in Richmond, postal authorities said.

Highway Job Faces Delay In Easements

Prospect on Shenandoah Great Smoky Parkway Doubtful.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Richmond, Feb. 26.—It is questionable whether the scenic highway to connect the Shendandoah National Park and the Great Smoky National Park will be built in the near future, it was learned today.

While National Park Service and Public Works Administration officials in Washington did not wish to be quoted, they made it plain the prospect of immediate and uninterrupted construction of the proposed highway is obscured by recent developments, though they believe the project will be realized ultimately.

Lack of funds was cited, as was the fact that the State of Virginia so far has not been able to obtain from landowners all of the scenic easement of 400 feet on each side of the 200-foot right of way.

Henry G. Shirley, State highway commissioner, said today he believed the problems eventually would be worked out satisfactorily. He said the State highway department had obtained scenic easements on form 70 to 80 per cent of those parts of the highway on which the Government had furnished plans to the department.

Shirley further said the original plans on which the State department and the Virginia Legislature acted called for a 200-foot right of way without scenic easement. He showed a copy of Secretary Ickes' memorandum of November 13, 1933, bearing this out. He also produced a copy of proceedings at a meeting held later at Baltimore.

This meeting was called by George L. Radcliffe, regional administrator under Secretary Ickes. No mention of scenic easements was made until the Legislature of 1934 had adjourned, Shirley said.

Secretary Ickes insists the State must give scenic easements of 400 feet on both sides of the highway. The State has no authority to condemn scenic easements.

By the Associated Press.

A. E. Demaray, associate National Parks director, said yesterday construction of the Shenandoah-Great Smoky Mountain parkway would be delayed until the States provide a 1,000-foot right of way.

Secretary Ickes asked the States involved—Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee—to provide clear title to 200 feet and an additional 800 feet over which the Government would have scenic control.

Demaray said Virginia has tendered the Interior Department deed for a 200-foot right of way for several miles south of the Shenandoah National Park, but he said the Government would not accept the deeds until the additional 800 feet is provided. Interior Department attorneys, he said, are making a study of Virginia laws in an effort to find some means of acquiring scenic rights to the property desired so as to expedite the construction work.

As Public Works Administrator, Ickes has allocated to the parkway $5,000,000, but only a small portion of this has been spent for surveys and location. Interior Department engineers estimate the work will cost between $16,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Key City Receipts Bear Out Capital's Notion of January Box-Office Champs

Six Films Are Made to Share Highest Honor

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

There can be no quibbling about the motion-picture "box-office champions for January," as determined by the Motion Picture Herald's monthly poll of key city receipts throughout the United States. They agree precisely with the judgment of the National Capital when these six pictures were presented on local screens.

First, second and third positions were uncontested. Three pictures tied for fourth rating.

The undisputed winner was "Forsaking All Others," in which Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Charles Butterworth and Robert Montgomery had a swell time, although their vehicle bore scant resemblance to its stage predecessor.

Second place went unequivocally to "The Little Minister," in which Katharine Hepburn and John Beal managed a commendable transcription of the Barrie drama into terms of celluloid, and that rousing comedy-drama of the race tracks, "Broadway Bill," with Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Walter Connolly and Raymond Walburn in the most engaging roles, dropped into the third notch.

Fox Scores a Double.

The three releases in a stalemate for the last of the money positions were "The County Chairman," starring Will Rogers; "Bright Eyes," with Shirley Temple and Jimmy Dunn, and "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer," with Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Sir Guy Standing and Richard Cromwell.

These ratings, which, it seems to me, are about as they should be, gives Fox a slight edge with two of the pictures tied for fourth—"The County Chairman" and "Bright Eyes."

The remainder score one each for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO-Radio, Columbia and Paramount, with M-G-M at the top of the heap in the No. 1 spot.

Carmela Ponselle, headlining the stage portion of the current program at the Earle Theater, is enjoying what might be termed a month's intermission between appearances with the Metropolitan Grand Opera Co., in New York. Her present Washington week is her last in vaudeville during this intermission, as she returns to the Met for the final month of its season. After that, a vaudeville tour of the West and a decision whether or not to accept a proffered motion picture contract. There seems to be no immediate rush about this last item.

The McKennas Watch Rudy.

Speaking of the Earle's current stage show, it is interesting to note that Joe and Jane McKenna, whose burlesque adagio dance is one of the perennial hits of vaudeville, are especialy interested in Rudy Vallee's screen work in "Sweet Music," the week's film feature at Thirteenth and E.

Both played principal parts in RKO's "Campus Sweethearts," in which Lehigh's little brother Rudy made one of his early screen attempts. Joe, it may be recalled, was cast opposite Ginger Rogers.

These versatile funsters, by the way, are sailing on the Ile de France on May 18 for a season in the British Isles and on the continent. In London they will play two weeks at the Palladium—the approximate equivalent of the old Palace on Broadway in the remote era of the two-a-day's heyday—one week at the Empire and then will move over to Manchester for one week at the Alhambra.

From England they will go to Germany for a month in Berlin and a month in Hamburg. Their dialogue is being pruned to a minimum to enable them to put on their act in German when they reach the land of Hitler and his chopping-blocksmen.

Bon voyage, Jane and Joe, and look out for anybody with a dress suit on in Berlin—he may be that axman that delights in lopping off ladies' heads!

If you are wondering what songs you will hear when Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler, co-starred for the first time on the screen, come along in "Go Into Your Dance," their new First National production, they will be "Latin From Manhattan," "About a Quarter to Nine," "The Little Things You Used to Do," "Mammy, I'll Sing About You," "Casino de Paree," "Go Into Your Dance" and "An Old-Fashioned Cocktail With an Old-Fashioned Girl." All were written by Warren Dublin.

The Mailman Again.

The following, written under date of Sunday, February 24, reaches the dramatic desk:

Dear Mr. Bell: Apropos of your enthusiasm for the D'Oyly Carte Company, I wonder if you have read the article in the December issue of The Stage, called "Here Come the Musicals," by Hiram Motherwell, concerning lyrics of the present day musicals? I am inclined to agree with Mr. Motherwell that the present day lyrics are just as good as Mr. Gilbert's, if not decidedly better.

Music for the musical end. America sent to Europe its justly famous Dayton Westminster Choir, directed by Williamson, as well as the St. Olaf Choir, directed by Christianson, and the people, from all reports, raved about them the same as you and I raved about the Savoyards.

I quite agree with you that the American taste for fine things is abominably low, due mostly to Hollywood's thinking all audiences in the U. S. are little above morons in intelligence. So, hip, hip, hooray! for your article in today's Post. Sincerely, (Signed) GUY ROBERTSON.

We Arise to Remark.

I am afraid Mr. Robertson has slightly misconstrued my Sabbath remarks. There was nothing in them to the effect that American taste was low—merely that it is a lamentable circumstance that American production methods are not such as to supply the demand of an American taste that is especially high.

No, I have not been privileged, to date, to read Mr. Motherwell's article on modern lyrics, but I have heard a great many of them through the passing of the years and I have yet to encounter any of native manufacture that stand up so unfailingly as Sir William S. Gilbert's.

Possibly my whole attitude toward the Savoyards has been misconstrued.

Where We Stand.

It has never been stated in these columns that the D'Oyly Carte Opera Co. possessed only operatic voices of the first grade, or that their acting surpassed all other acting ever seen in the Gilbert and Sullivan operas in this country.

What I have insisted—and still believe—is that the Savoyards, by some admirable legerdemain, succeed in presenting performances that are so perfectly coordinated, so compactly unified, both as to interpretation of the scores and reading of the lines, and on such a consistently maintained level of excellence that they convey an immediate impression of perfection in understanding, preparation and execution.

There have been individual performances of Gilbert and Sullivan roles on this side that have excelled some of the individual performances offered by the D'Oyly Carte artistes, but there has never, to my knowledge, been a week of repertoire interpreted with such uniform excellence and ensemble perfection as that enjoyed by capacity audiences in the National Theater last week.

The D'Oyly Carte level of excellence may be only 80 per cent perfect—but is a consistently maintained 80 per cent, which, to me, is more satisfactory than a performance in which a star might strike a high average of 90 per cent perfection, one or two others 75, and the rest 50 per cent.

That is my story, even if I am stuck with it—which I do not believe I am.

The Drama Guild of Washington is rehearsing "Harbor Light," by Owen Davis as the next offering of its theatrical season. Performances will take place in the Wardman Park Theater on Thursday and Friday, March 7 and 8. The cast includes Denis E. Connell, Frances Brunt, Thomas M. Cahill, John Sikken, Harry A. Westcott, Ruth Perrott, Ailene Sanford, Francis Koonce, Lucille Fisher, Elizabeth Sypher, Helena Cook, Jane Plummer Rice, Betty Brunstetter, Frederick V. Rand, Audrey Bernhardt, Betty Owens, Paul Bradbury Walter, Arman Bakshian, Wilda Kilbourn and C. Murray Bernhardt. L. W. Currier is directing the play.

To Do Poetic Drama.

George Eliot's powerful poetic drama, "The Spanish Gypsy," which will have its American—perhaps world—premiere at the Arts Club of Washington on Thursday evening, February 28, and be repeated on March 1, narrowly missed being played throughout this country some years ago, and by no less a person than Julia Marlowe.

In fact, it was intended to be the feature production of her winter's tour, and Charles Edward Russell, renowned writer and critic of this city, was about to do the rearrangement which it needed. Just then Miss Marlowe was offered the American rights to Francois Coppee's play about the young pretender, "Bonnie Prince Charlie," which was having a most successful run in Paris, and it was thought best to use that while its popularity in France was at its height. "The Spanish Gypsy" got crowded out, and somehow not taken up again.

Arranger and Star.

Dorothy Lawrence, who has done the arrangement of the scenes to be given at the Arts Club, and who plays the title role, is one of the leading members of a group of young people calling themselves the "Bankside Players," who several years ago undertook the revival of classical and serious drama. In past seasons they have presented some outstanding productions at the Arts Club, the first being "Edward III" from the Shakespeare Apocrypha, never before given in America. Others were Shelley's "The Cenci" and George H. Boker's "Koenigsmark."

Playing opposite Dorothy Lawrence, as "Fedalma," will be Richard Midgley, who came to Washington fresh with laurels from the Pacific Coast, as "Don Silva."

Others in the play, selected from the leading dramatic talent of this city, are Martin Scranage, as "Lorenzo;" Maurice Jarvis, as "Blasco;" Murray Sheehan, as "Father Isidor;" Jesse Veitch, as "Zarca;" John Sikken, as "Juan;" William Joerson McManus, as "Nadar," and John Victory, as "Lopez."

Despite all of the hullabaloo that has been raised over the supposed flood of Red propaganda that has been inundating the screens of the country in the form of films made and distributed under the aegis of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, that eminent pundit of the celluloids, Mr. Terry Ramsaye, has it figured out that in "screen time" audience hours the Red Russian product would appear to rate in the vicinity of one-half of 1 per cent. These productions are now playing in 152 theaters in this country to an average weekly attendance of 920,000, with an approximate release schedule of 15 feature-length pictures a year. So now you know.

What's-in-a-Name Note.

From the picture of her appearing on the back cover of the February 23 issue of the Motion Picture Herald, they never should have changed the name of Marlene Dietrich's next picture from "Caprice Espagnol" to "The Devil Is a Woman."

It should have been called "Leg Long!"

Popular Actor Reaches Bottom on Coast!

And this interesting picture proves it! At right you will observe Master James Cagney, who has dropped in to pay a visit to Percy Westmore's make-up studio, on the Warner Brothers' lot, to inspect the donkey head he wears in the role of Bottom in Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." This is Max Reinhardt's initial adventure in film-making and Master Cagney's work has so impressed him that he has declared that this pugnacious young man is the best actor in Hollywood—which, coming from Herr Doctor, is high praise, indeed.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywood, Feb. 25.

ERNST LUBITSCH was imported from Germany by Paramount after he made the picture "Passion," and now is in charge of the complete production at that studio.

Ernst Lubitsch.

Although he is the head man at Paramount, he hasn't a contract for his new job. He has only his former director's contract. He still insists that the hardest part of running a studio is to know what telephone to pick up when one starts ringing. Part of his task is to go into conference with other directors and the associate producers concerning stories. The third day, a director came to him for approval to purchase a story. Lubitsch okayed it, but asked: "Where did you find that story? I've been looking for one like that to direct myself."

Lubitsch must look at the rushes of every picture being made. He must attend the preview of every Paramount picture, and each picture will be previewed two or three times. Lubitsch never cared much about going to pictures, and there are few pictures that he sat through all the way.

However, it is one instance where a man who can make a picture himself is dispensing advice on how it should be done.

HE is a heavy-set fellow for his 5 feet 4½ inches of height. His skin is dark and his hair is black and a lock of it sprawls down on his forehead to remind you of Napoleon. He is seldom seen without a big brown cigar in the corner of his mouth. His expensive suits are sprinkled with expensive cigar ashes.

Although noted as a director, he is secretly proud of his athletic ability. He is a glutton for exercise. In his new Bel-Air mansion, he has a special gymnasium. He employs a trainer, Terry Hunt, who puts him through strenuous routines and massages him. Lubitsch lifts weights, swims, plays tennis and boxes. He often boxes with a cigar in his mouth.

The day he moved into his new house, he threw a large party. During the evening one of the guests walked over to him and quietly asked: "Where is the bathroom?" "I don't know yet," answered Lubitsch. "But you're fortunate. The architect is here and we'll ask him."

He is very particular about his food; not in quantity or a desire for fancy dishes, but quality. The steak must be prepared perfectly. He hates cheese and can't stand the look or the taste of it.

One night, while he was dining, he heard odd noises outside. He summoned his servant and asked: "Otto, what is that noise?" "Those are frogs in the pond outside, sir." Lubitsch looked at him. "Otto, is this necessary?" he asked.

He is especially fond of dancing and is a fine dancer, one of the best in the movie colony. He will talk about fine music and the opera, but will never go to a concert. When he plays the Victrola, it is to hear a popular song.

He dislikes jewelry and wears only a watch. To play cards bores him. He plays a fair game of chess, but not often. The only sport he cares to witness is a prize fight, and he fights the fight in his ringside seat.

HE considers himself a good piano player, but plays everything in the manner of a German band, pounding out the rhythm. When he was a youngster he wanted to be either an orchestra leader or a comedian.

He never became an orchestra leader, but he was a comedian in the early silent flickers made in Berlin. He also was a dramatic actor, and worked for Max Reinhardt. He has great respect for Reinhardt, and stands before him somewhat in the manner of a schoolboy.

He is fond of the ladies, becomes very romantic, and generally runs to type in the selection of a girl friend. He likes them small, feminine, attentive and preferably a good dancer among other qualities.

He sleeps at irregular hours, but when he decides to go to bed, he can sleep. Often he gets up, has breakfast, goes for a walk or takes some exercise, and then goes back to bed. He sleeps in black silk pajamas. He sleeps in both parts of the pajamas, the coat and the trousers.

He seldom takes a drink, and a small glass of wine causes him to feel gay and particularly lovable. He is good company, and is great at telling stories.

He has two nicknames. Some people call him by the first syllable of his name—Lu. Others do not.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

DIMINISHING work is given by Walter J. Owens, secretary, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as the reason for dismissal of 23 employes in the Washington office this month. The same reason, Mr. Owens said, applies to the dismissal of 209 employes, principally bank examiners, in the field.

BAKER.

Work has now reached bottom, and no more dismissals are anticipated at FDIC, it was said last night.

This is expected to allay fears at FDIC that additional personnel reductions are in store for the immediate future.

Reports of overtime were flatly denied by Mr. Owens.

"Occasionally we have a rush job in the legal division due to certain pending legislation in Congress, but that is not frequent and not burdensome on any individual or group of employes," the FDIC secretary declared.

Working conditions at FDIC, quartered in the National Press Building are found to be above the average of Government offices. Employes are enjoying practically all of the privileges of civil service workers—hours, annual and sick leave; the offices are light, well ventilated, not crowded, and the equipment is modern. Prospects of FDIC going under civil service are dim this year, at least, according to those who should know.

Rest-Less Rests.

We are no mathematicians,
For figures we've no flair,
But we have found we're duty bound
To figure leave with care,
For though we're given 15 days
(Not bad it seems we'll grant)
When one but knows just how it goes
It actually seems scant.

A half an hour on business bent,
A relative's last rites,
Such things appear to cause each year
A lot of sorry plights;
For though allowed our 15 days
It is to our dismay
A lucky break when one may take
Two weeks for rest or play.

Griff Alters Position on Holdouts

'Ungrateful Renegades' Now Merely Boys a Bit at Odds.

Situation, However, Held Serious as Hurlers Are in Demand.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., Feb. 26.—The holdout situation on the Washington Ball Club remained unchanged today, except for the fact that Owner Clark Griffith was interpreting it differently.

Yesterday Griffith's recalcitrant ball players—four pitchers and three infielders—who were "ungrateful renegades who are blind to their own welfare." Today, the boys who want more money are simply young fellows who are just a bit at odds with him on the salary question.

"It's nothing serious," said Griffith today. 'They'll all be here by the time they were ordered to report. It's the same stoy every year, this business of delaying in signing. Some ball players just have an idea it makes them feel important if they don't sign until the last possible moment."

Does an About Face.

Thus did Griffith do an about face toward the group who are nearing the contract deadline. Yesterday, Lyn Lary was warned that he must watch his step in the salary wrangle because Ossie Bluege was just as good a short stop and itching to play. Bobby Burke's demands were called outrageous, and Griffith was rapidly losing patience with pitchers Earl Whitehill and Walter Stewart, and First Baseman Joe Kuhel.

Today, apparently realizing that he might have spoken too harshly of the players who form the very hub of his team, Griffith was discounting the serious import of it all, pointing out that no player was a holdout until he failed to report when ordered.

The Washington club owner is like that. With the dog still biting the man as far as news developments here is concerned, Griffith is eager to keep his ball club in the headlines and speaks for publication on little or no provocation. His holdout scare and his denial thus provided him with two stories in the paper where none might have sprouted before.

Reason for Alarm.

At that, Griffith has reason to be alarmed over the salary situation among the Nats.

With Manager Bucky Harris crying for pitching strength, Earl Whitehill, Bobby Burke, Jack Russell and Walter Stewart are conducting their salary negotiations from a distant vantage point—particularly Whitehill and Burke. Whitehill represents the strongest concentration of pitching power on the club and it is upon the shoulders of Burke that a deal of the club's mound burden will fall this season.

For the first time in his nine years in the big leagues, Burke last season gave indications that he is a big leaguer, and high are the hopes that Griffith holds for the lean southpaw this year. He doubtless will feel constrained to deal more leniently with Burke, Whitehill and Kuhel than with Lary, Russell, Stewart and Myer.

Fresh in Griffith's memory is last season's unhappy experience with hold-out Cliff Bolton, who was kept out of action until late July and whose absence from the line-up was a blow from which the Nats never recovered. If anything is to alter Griffith's smugness on the salary question, it is the reminder of Bolton's case.

'Baby Bahr' Gate Added At Tropical Park Track

Miami, Feb. 26 (AP).—When Tropical Park opens its gates for the final meeting beginning March 11, the Baby Bahr gate will replace the old Waite gate, which was the cause of many poor starts. The Baby Bahr gate is the most popular starting gate yet invented, and is in use in New York, Maryland, New England, Texas and Chicago.

Terps Facing Bout With Aces on Shelf

Nedomatsky and McAboy Won't Fight Saturday.

With Ivan Nedomatsky, Southern Conference lightweight champion, and Lyman McAboy, 155-pounder, on the shelf with injuries, Coach Jack Harmony yesterday shuffled his Maryland mittmen in an effort to uncover a new and formidable line-up for the Army match on Saturday.

If Dick Babcock passes his conditional exams in scholastic work he probably will occupy Nedomatsky's former position in the 135-pound bout. Mike Lombardo tentatively has been assigned the 155-pound spot with "Stew" McCaw fighting at 165-pounds.

Berlinger Threatened With Loss of Standing

Philadelphia, Feb. 26 (AP).—Barney Berlinger, former University of Pennsylvania and Olympic track star, said today a threat in Washington against his amateur standing because he played in a professional basket ball game Sunday is "ridiculous."

"It's true I played with the Penn A. C. and we were beaten, but not until the game was over did I know our opponents were professionals," Berlinger said, when he was told E. Joseph Aronoff, District of Columbia A. A. U. official, had protested his amateur rating.

Boston Ready To Welcome Old Hero

Return of John L. Will Be Equaled as Babe 'Comes Home.'

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, Feb. 26.—So the old slugger is coming home!

Home to the folks who love him best, just as that other Boston sports hero, the mighty John L. Sullivan, did so many years ago, when the rest of America told him to step aside for youth.

And as New England hailed the returning John L., so will it greet the Babe, its other prodigal son, when George Herman Ruth hits town, a much be-titled member of the Boston Braves.

Although the Babe gained most of his glory during his 15 years with the Yankees, he was always the idol of the New England fans. When Sullivan returned home his admirers unhitched the horses from his hack and pulled it themselves.

Never Doubted He'd Return.

Perhaps they will do the same for Ruth, although the only horse-drawn vehicle on Boston streets is an ancient Victoria, highly regarded by sentimental Harvard boys, that seems much too decrepit to transport in safety one of Babe's immense bulk.

New England folk have never doubted Ruth would come back. They begged Tom Yawkey and Eddie Collins to get him when they purchased the Red Sox two years ago. When they realized he would never return as an American Leaguer, they concentrated on Emil Fuchs and Charley Adams, of the Braves.

Boston learned to love Ruth when he was a careless, spendthrift youth with a rawhide left arm, long before he started knocking baseballs over fences.

Pitching Feat Recalled.

When they talk about pitching feats hereabouts, one of the first mentioned is the 2-to-1 victory the Babe registered over Sherrod Smith in the second game of the 1916 world series between the Red Sox and Brooklyn. That game went 14 innings and is the longest world series struggle in the book.

Two years later when Ed Barrow, who played such a prominent part in Ruth's career, was managing the Sox, the Babe won two world series games from the Chicago Cubs.

Few other than Boston fans can tell offhand that Ruth's pitching mark for successive scoreless innings, 29, still stands and that his first appearance in a world series game was as a highly unsuccessful pinch-hitter in a 1915 clash with the Phillies, just after Bill Carrigan had recalled him from the Providence club.

News Creates Furore.

And Boston fans will never forget how Harry Frazee ruined a championship club to make the Yankees a winner. Frazee sold all of his stars, letting Ruth go for $125,000.

Fuchs' Statement.

In his outline of the situation for Ruth's benefit, while emphasizing that McKechnie retains full managerial authority for this year, Fuchs said:

"If it is determined, after your affiliation with the club in 1935, that it is for the mutual interest of the club for you to take up the active management on the field, there would be absolutely no handicap in having you so appointed.

"It may be that you will want to devote your future years to becoming an owner or part owner of a major league ball club. It may be that you may discover what the people are really looking forward to and appreciate in you is the color and activity that you give to the game by virtue of your hitting and playing and that you would rather have someone else, accustomed to the hardships and drudgery of managing a ball club, continue that task."

This was interpreted to mean that Ruth, if he is still eager for the managerial reins at the close of the coming season and convinces McKechnie he can handle the job, will get a chance to pilot the Braves in 1936. McKechnie then probably would step up to the post of general manager, similar to the position Eddie Collins now holds with the rival Red Sox.

Wanted as a Pla

All hands, however, made it clear that while Ruth will be welcomed as an associate in the business office as well as in the conduct of playing-field affairs, he is mainly wanted for his drawing powers as an active player this year and for as many years thereafter as he feels he can continue to don a uniform.

"If the old legs stand up, I hope to play in at least 100 games for the Braves this year," said Ruth. "I'm in good shape now. I think I can still do my share of hitting and I'll give everything I have to help make things click for the Braves. This is a great opportunity for me, but I'm going to let the future take care of itself while I give my old friend, Bill McKechnie, full support and join up with that old war horse—Rabbit Maranville."

The Babe unquestionably is elated at the prospect of returning to Boston, where his popularity is as great as it has ever been during his 15 years with the Yankees. When he made a "farewell" appearance at Fenway Park, against the Red Sox, last season, a record-breaking crowd turned out to give Ruth an ovation.

Will Face the Deans.

National League pitching, including the celebrated Dean brothers, Carl Hubbell, Lonnie Warneke and other mound aces, won't worry the Babe, who recalled today he had generally done "pretty well" against the best available in World Series competition. Ruth established numerous slugging records in seven championship battles with the Yankees against National League pitching.

Nevertheless, Ruth admitted it meant "quite a pull" to part company with the Yankees and his boss, Col. Ruppert, who paid the Babe higher salaries than any other figure in baseball history and was, said the slugger, "just like a father to me."

Ruth's aggregate salary with the Yankees amounted to $842,000 for 15 years, in addition to at least $35,000 more as his share of the player pools of seven World Series and an estimated total of $1,000,000 obtained from such by-products as the movies, the radio, newspaper syndicates and commercial indorsements. His salary soared from $28,000 in 1920, his first year with the Yankees, to a peak of $80,000 in 1930 and 1931.

Ruppert paid high tribute to Ruth's ability, predicted he still had a bright future ahead of him in the game and disclosed he had willingly agreed to the Boston deal, even though it meant the Babe would continue to capitalize his playing exploits in a rival league.

Previously the colonel had indicated he would be reluctant to let Ruth go unless he could get a full-fledged manager's job, although he held out no prospect of future advancement with the Yankees.

Dean Resentful Over Invasion Of Bambino

Ruth Should Remain in the Loop Where He Made Money, Says Dizzy.

By the Associated Press.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Feb. 26.—Dizzy Dean, the St. Louis Cardinals' star hurler, tonight expressed resentment at Babe Ruth's entrance into the National League.

"He made all his money in the American League, so why doesn't he stay there?" the talkative Dean declared.

Dean, with his wife, paused here between trains en route from Hot Springs, Ark., to the Cards' training camp at Bradenton, Fla.

He was informed by a reporter that Ruth had signed with the Boston Braves as vice president and assistant manager.

"I don't believe he (Ruth) was ever worth $80,000 a year," Dizzy said. "I don't think I am worth it and I don't believe there ever will be a player entitled to that much money for playing one season."

California Bills Seek Bigger Cut From Racing

Sacramento, Calif., Feb. 26 (AP).—California's two-year experiment with legalized horse racing and parimutuel betting has convinced many of the State's lawmakers the track operators are making too much money, the State not enough and that the bettors, who pay the freight, are being squeezed in between.

Fifteen legislators already have introduced bills designed to change racing regulations, with chief interest in rearranging the present "split" between the State and the track. The State now gets 4 per cent of the amount bet and the track takes 8 per cent.

Ruthian Achievements in Detail From Rookie to Star of Stars

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Here's a thumbnail sketch of George Herman (Babe) Ruth by years:

1914—At the age of 20 he made his professional debut with Baltimore Orioles in International League as pitcher and outfielder. During the year he was purchased by Boston Red Sox for $2,900 and farmed to Providence Club.

1916—Pitched full World Series game against Brooklyn Dodgers, winning, 2 to 1, in 14 innings and holding Dodgers scoreless in last 13.

1917—Still a pitcher, but his batting prowess began to take shape as he hit .325 in 52 games.

Sets Mound Record.

1918—Won two series games against Chicago Cubs and ran his string of consecutive scoreless innings to 29 for a series record.

1919—Started his home-run splurge, hitting 29 circuit drives for Boston Red Sox and was sold to New York Yankees for $125,000.

1923—It was known as the year of the "return of Ruth." He netted 41 homers during the season and then in the series with the Giants he hit three homers, a triple, a double and two singles and became the first player to hit two homers in successive times at bat and three homers in one World Series.

Clouts 46 Homers.

1924—Yankees tumbled to seventh place, but Ruth hit 46 homers and led American League hitters with .378.

1926—Hit three home runs in fourth game of World Series with St. Louis Cardinals, breaking record.

1927—Signed three-year contract with Yankees for $70,000 and boosted home-run record to 60.

Gets Highest Salary.

1932—Signed one-year contract for $75,000 and celebrated opening of season with pair of homers against Athletics.

1933—Injuries plagued him and his decline as a player began. He received $52,000 and batted .301.

1934—Paid $35,000, played 125 games, hit 22 homers and batted .288 in last year as Yankee regular. Collected his 700th homer and 2,000th base on balls.

Ruth's Advance Brings Joy to Senior Loop

Mack Voices Sorrow of American League in Losing Star.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—The graduation of Babe Ruth into the managerial-magnate class of major league baseball today was greeted with both sorrow and pleasure by American and National League leaders. For Babe, personally, there was only praise and good wishes.

"I thought the Babe would remain in the American League," said Connie Mack, venerable leader of the Philadelphia Athletics and dean of the managers in both circuits, who promoted Ruth's recent tour of the Orient, "but I also knew he would take a managing or executive position elsewhere if he could get it. I am very sorry to see him leave. Just what effect his departure will have on the league I can not guess at this time."

Called Asset to Loop.

"Ruth will be a great asset to the National League, the Braves and Boston," enthused Frankie Frisch, manager of the World Champion St. Louis Cardinals, in welcoming the Babe to the older circuit. "He has always been a great player and, while he may have slowed down he still can hit and will be a dangerous man at the plate for National League pitchers."

"I think it is a good move for the Braves to take Ruth," declared Gerald P. Nugent, president of the Phillies. "I know he's very popular in Boston. He ought to help them and the National League, particularly in cities like Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, for example, where he will be almost new."

Deans and Hubbell Are Warned The Bambino's in Their League

By Paul Gallico.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—And so George Herman Ruth is a National Leaguer now.

I've heard of that circuit. They don't go in much for sluggers but they do run to right smart pitchers from time to time. The Dean boys work for that outfit. So does that skinny feller, Hubbell. Remember him? He's the feller that struck out six of the most famous American League sluggers in a row at the All-Star game last summer.

The Deans and that Hubbel don't think very much of American League hitting. But a lot of the National League pitchers are going to damn old Jedge Fuchs for bringing the Pitcher's Curse into the National baseball bund. Everything was going along so nicely and that had to happen. Remember, Babe Ruth may be an old gentleman from the middle down, but he still applies his bat to a grooved ball with the same results. He still hits that old walk-around ball.

Glad to Have Ruth as Player, Says Braves' Leader of His Aid

By the Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Feb. 26. "The Braves are to be congratulated on obtaining the services of Babe Ruth as a player," Bill McKechnie, manager of the Boston National League Club, said today at the club's training camp when announcement of the former home run king's signing for three years as "vice president and assistant manager" was announced.

"Ruth will be an asset to any ball club just as long as he can step up to the plate," he continued, "and I feel that his bat will be a big help to the Braves during the coming season. Whether he can play regularly remains to be seen."

McKechnie was not surprised at the announcement, and said that the formal signing has only been a matter of arriving at satisfactory terms.

Asked if he would remain as manager of the club, McKechnie said: "Yes, until I am advised otherwise. You know, no ball club can have two managers and I will continue to direct the club on the field. If the club decided to make Ruth manager I would naturaly step out."

Tutticurio, With Coucci Up, Wins Barton Purse at Hialeah

Dokas, 3 to 5, Takes Show Money

Sun Monk Returns to Form to Score at $17.60 Mutuel.

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Feb. 26.—Silvio Coucci, whose riding this winter has been pretty well split up between horses and airplanes, put up one of his inimitable rides to win the Bartow purse astride the Brandon Stable's improved Tutticurio here today. Just returned from the West Coast, where he rode Twenty Grand in the Santa Anita Handicap, "Little Cooch" completely outrode A. J. "Whitey" Abel, who was guiding St. Moritz, which he owns, trains and rides himself.

C. S. Bancroft's Dokas, odds-on favorite at 3 to 5, was a well-beaten third, four lengths behind. Tutticurio outlasted St. Moritz by a nose to pay $9.82. His time for the seven furlongs was 1:24 1-5.

St. Moritz probably was best. He was bothered by Dokas around the final bend but got through when the favorite ran wide at the turn for home. Had Abel been able to compete with the masterly handling given Tutticurio by Coucci, his mount doubtlessly would have won. Tutticurio burst away on top at the break and led by daylight to the first turn, where Dokas and St. Moritz moved alongside. "Tutty" apparently was doomed, but Coucci rode like a demon on the inside and his mount's head popped in front after a long battle. Dokas was well beaten.

Sun Monk Scores.

Sun Monk, running back to his good second to Miney Myerson, staged a cyclonic stretch rush to beat a small but select field in the fifth event, a seven-furlong test for 4-year-olds and upward. The Sun Briar gelding was outrun early, while Night Sprite, a three-time winner, set a suicidal pace. The veteran Joe Renick sent Sun Monk up on the outside after turning for home and the $17.60 for Two Hazard won going away by a length from Quel Jeu, which also finished well to head Night Sprite. The time was 1:23 4-5.

Happy Find made a show of the field in the mile and a sixteenth jaunt over the turf course. No grass grew under this filly's feet, for she literally hid from her pursuers, stealing ten lengths' lead winning by that margin in 1:44, a fifth of a second slower than Octaroro's record. The daughter of Happy Argo paid $12.50. Mickey's Man, the choice, broke slowly on the outside but got up to head Languorous for the place.

Despite losing considerable ground, Erebus was good enough to score in a driving finish and take the second purse by a length from the long shot Idle Along. Chief A was third. Waterset and Impromptu, the latter favorite, ran themselves into defeat. Idle Along forged to the front in the stretch only to bow to the fast closing Erebus by a length. Chief A was another length away. Erebus returned $9.90.

Maxine F. Takes Opener.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 26. The familiar sight of Jockey Johnny Gilbert guiding a 2-year-old to victory over the local 3-furlong course was provided again in today's opening dash. The Kansas kid had the leg up on Maxine F., favorite at $8.40 for $2, and the combination withstood a long, hard drive to prevail in a finish that saw three horses heads apart. Sandy Beach was second and Flopsie, a clockers' special, third in the field of 14 maiden fillies. Maxine F. rushed into early command and though never able to shake off Sandy Beach, she held on gamely to win in 0:35 2-5.

Jimmy Lynch, who yesterday supplanted Georgie Watson as leading 1935 apprentice rider, broke Merovech in front of 11 other platers in the third race and kept the gelding on top in a spirited finish with the heavily backed Gallic and the long priced Newell. Old Judge Schilling, running in improved form, tired chasing the winner and left the chase to Gallic and Newell in the final furlong. Gallic, in close quarters early, ran a winning race. Merovech paid $10.50.

Booms Pal, $28.30, headed Fairly Wild for the final purse, with Big Show losing the place by a nose. Brass Monkey was a bang-up fourth despite very poor handling.

Hialeah Park passed the $10,000,000 mark in 34 days of racing.

Lack of Funds May Cancel Annual Central 'C' Club Track Meet

Conradis Pushing Plan to Raise Expenses by May 18.

THE fate of the famous Central "C" Club track and field meet, one of the outstanding interscholastic events of the Washington and Middle and South Atlantic area, is hanging in the balance. For 15 years a top-notch, blue-ribbon attraction which annually draws the cream of high and prep school competition from all over the East, the meet is facing a fight within the next few days which threatens its existence.

"There is only a 50-50 chance," said Albert E. Conradis, local lawyer and president of the "C" Club, yesterday, "that we can hold the meet this year. We are trying every way to figure was and means which will enable us to.

"The 'C' Club for the past three or four ears has been hard-pressed to continue the meet and this year the financial condition of the club has recahed a crisis which makes it doubtful whether or not we will be aple to sponsor it again."

Conradis said that within five or six days the club will have arrived at e decision. In the meantime, local schools have been asked to keep May 18 open in the event that the meet is held.

Funds Sought.

The president of the alumni club is pushing a plan which he hopes will replenish the depleted funds of the organization sufficiently to permit holding the meet. The expense of the meet is annually about $400 and it is understood that the funds which the club now has available are scarcely worth mentioning.

One reason for the dwindling resources of the organization, Conradis said, was the poor football season suffered by Central last fall. Central was forced to forego two interhigh games due to cancellation of the last three games of the series.

"We generally have one game set aside from which at least part of the profits will go to the "C" Club. I believe in 1933 it was the Central-Georgetown prep game. Last year, Central had such a poor season that our income from this source was absolutely nothing," he said.

Few Contributions.

"Then, also, it has been increasingly hard of late to get contributions from the club. Dues are only voluntary and bring in next to nothing. We sold very little advertising in the "C" Club program last year.

The "C" Club meet was originated in 1919 largely as a memorial to Emory M. Wilson, former principal and father of athletics at Central. From the outset it was a distinct success and formed a stepping-stone for some of the great college track and field stars of the past decade. It was in the "C" Club meet of 1924 that Frank Hussey, the former Olympic star, set a new national interscholastic 100-yard record of 9.7 seconds which stood for a number of years.

The meet has always been a magnet for school teams from Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania and often from New York, with hundreds of athletes competing annually. The "C" Club team records list Central as four timse the victor; Staunton Military Academy, with 2 victories; Woodberry Forest, with 2; Tech High, with 3; Eastern, with 2, and John Marshall of Richmond, Devitt Prep and Episcopal, with 1 apiece.

Mount Rainier High School's basket ball quintet, Prince Georges County champion, ended its regular season with a 52-13 victory over Bowie High yesterday afternoon on the Mount Rainier court.

The Mounts next competition will be in the State title tourney which will start in about ten days.

Bowie was always far out of the running, the score at the end of the first quarter being 20-1. Tillie Scott, with 16 points, was high scorer.

The Babe Changes Cities and Leagues

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Deans, Hubbell Get Warning Of Trouble

Once the baseball has fled the park he doesn't have to run the bases.

I just thought I would begin this little essay on a cheery note for the pitchers.

There seems to have been a number of practical considerations in this deal which finally gives the Forgotten Ball Player a job. The New York Yankees did a pretty good job for themselves. It was generally accepted by the fans as well as the correspondents that the old gentleman with the slim ankles was sort of cluttering up the precincts of right field each and sundry summer afternoon, and that he was moving after fly balls and hits through the infield more in the manner of a Maharajah walking in an affair of state than an active athlete trying to make time.

The newspapers rarely mentioned it, but you could always hear the boys in the press roost muttering sadly as a fly ball fell at his feet—"The Babe of five years ago would have had that one in his pocket." Any hit ball that should have been an out and wasn't is apt to be expensive to a team that is trying to win a pennant. The hits and runs that Ruth was getting at the plate were leaking away through him in the outfield.

There was then, too, the matter of the little fee that Ruth commanded annually and there was further the fact that while a man might not be the same asset to your club as he once had been, he might turn into a dangerous liability if he appeared in the line-up of any other American League club, just dangerous enough to beat you out of a pennant in a couple of crucial games. All of these things the Yankees have solved beautifully by having Ruth waived out of the younger major league and sent to a National League club, where he can not possibly menace the American League pitchers through the regular season. The American Leaguers now will be able to get some sleep for the first time in 15 years.

But if the Babe can attract some sort of a bankroll for the Jedge, I fancy that they will market in the better stores where they are showing the exclusive models.

But in the meantime, if you don't think I'm not going to be present the first time Babe Ruth faces Dizzy Dean, or even Brother Paul, you'd better go lie down and rest yourself a while, because you ain't well.

Ruth Goes to Braves as Player, Ass't Manager, Vice President

christened "the house that Ruth built"—means the end of speculation as to the possibility of his replacing Joseph Vincent McCarthy as manager. A year ago the Yankee owner wanted the Babe to try his hand at managing the No. 1 farm club at Newark, in the International League, Ruth rejected this, insisting he would not return to the minors in any capacity, and Ruppert thereupon apparently dismissed any idea of testing the slugger's managerial ability in New York.

McCarthy's contract as Yankee manager runs out at the end of the forthcoming season, but he not only seems to have Ruppert's complete confidence now, but no real rival for the job.

The Boston negotiations neared a climax last Friday when Fuchs telephoned Ruth and Ruppert, then made a hurried trip to New York to outline the details. Actually, the deal was closed at a conference in Ruth's apartment Sunday morning, subject only to Ruppert's final approval and the technical business of getting waivers from other American League club owners. This was not completed until late last night.

Ruth will sign a player contract, calling for a straight salary, and a separate contract with officials and stockholders of the Boston Club, covering other details of the tie-up. The Babe is scheduled to go to Boston Thursday to complete the deal and then outline his plans to Boston newspapermen. He probably will leave next week to join Manager McKechnie and the rest of the Braves at St. Petersburg, Fla., where his erstwhile Yankee teammates will be neighbors.

The Babe's presence in the Boston line-up will add special interest to the series of nine exhibition games at St. Petersburg between the Braves and the Yankees.

to hear of Ruth joining a National League Club.

Dressen "Delighted."

"I am delighted to hear it. The Babe is a fine character and still a good ball player," said Dressen. "It was a great move for the Braves to get him, for he is sure to help their team and also to be a big drawing card in every city in the National League."

Although he will have to contend with the Babe as a counter attraction, Tom Yawkey, youthful owner of the Red Sox, was outspoken in welcoming Ruth to Boston.

"I join in welcoming the Babe back to Boston," Yawkey said. "I believe that the presence of Ruth in Boston will be a great thing for baseball and that my club, as well as the Braves, will share in the benefits of it."

Sees Golden Glint.

Casey Stengel, manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, saw the golden glint of increased gate receipts in the National League as the result of Ruth's shift to the Braves.

"Great stuff," declared Casey. "The Babe deserves a break and I hope he and Boston profit by the connection. I know the league will."

Other comment from major league figures:

Walter Johnson, Cleveland Indians: "There wasn't any doubt in my mind that Ruth could continue in baseball in one capacity or another. There were plenty of places for him."

Jimmne Foxx, Philadlephia Athletics: "A break for Boston. Babe is loved by the ball players."

Grobmier Card To Feature 'Rassle'

By George Considine.

THROUGH the courtesy (and business acumen) of Promoter Joe Turner, Washington's legion of mat fans tomorrow night, at the Auditorium, will enjoy what promises to be the most bang-up card of the indoor season. No less a personality than Fred Grobmier—yes, lanky Fred, the scissors king—will hold forth.

Now just because Fearless Fred applies the Japanese scissors lock upon his thick muscled frat brothers, it's no intimation that he is a big cut-up. Far from it. Probably nowhere in the hardy rassle gentry can one find a more serious student.

In fact his reputation as an artist is so wide-spread that even growling, supremely confident Gino Garibaldi, who shares the flood lights with him, admits, albeit reluctantly, that he's not so bad. As usual the featured journeymen will toil on a two-out-of-three mickeyfinn basis. Incidentally, the winnah gets a fling with his majesty Jimmy Londos. Although Grobmier rules a slight favorite over the husky Eyetalian, the latter can be depended upon to wage a warfare of major intensity.

Good Semi-Final.

The semifinal, a 45-minute bout, bids fair to steal a good deal of thunder from the main event. Once in a blue moon is such a stellar performer as Blue Sun Jennings, that bold, bad Injun boy, paired with a grappler of the All-American roughhousing ability of Dick Daviscourt.

Very little foresight is needed to visualize the torrid possibilities wrapped up in this combination. Mayhem falls considerably short of an apt description. And besides, why describe it when you can go and see for yourself? You won't be sorry.

Right on down to the 30-minute prelims, the management promises action of a bristling variety. Boris Demitroff, who has been flattening the west coast talent these last few weeks, has a business appointment with Abie Goldberg, youthful Joosh sensation.

And assigned to hoisting the proverbial curtain are pugnacious Jim Henry and the thrashing Goiman, Andy Rascher.

Nawsty Weather Discomfits Both Griffs and Biloxi Mayor

By a Staff Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., Feb. 25.—The collective faces of the Biloxi Chamber of Commerce were a deep crimson today—a State of complexion induced by the combined forces of a cold wave and embarrassment.

Spokesman Anthony V. Ragusin, secretary of the Chamber, risked pneumonia to attend the morning practice of the small contingent of Nats attired in the conventional shirtsleeves and panama hat which is the emblem that adorns all Biloxis publicity literature that emanates from his office, but it was only a foolhardy sacrifice to duty. The thermometer hovered around freezing and a cold slanting rain in the early morning combined to produce the worst day of training in the Nats 'six years at Biloxi. To save the last remaining vestige of Mr. Ragusins vocal chords, a telegram was dispatched to his office this morning from the Washington club's headquarters admitting that "the weather is unusual for this time of year" in Biloxi.

The upholstery in the Nats' hotel lobby began to take terrific punishment from the rookie batterymen today.

An epidemic of sore feet has struck the camp. It seems that all the boys decided that new baseball shoes were vital to a good impression in early practice and they are now paying the fiddler who apparently designed the shoes. When they walk, they walk on eggs, but for the most part they are sticking closer to the easy chairs than the cushions.

The two Washington rookies, Dick Lanahan and Archie Scrivener, are among the most pitiful victims of the barking dogs. To make it more complicating, Scrivener says he is slightly "off his feed" too.

With all the impetuosity of youth, 40-year-old Alec McColl, who was a big league pitcher before the World War, today wrote Owner Griffith for permission to report at camp immediately instead of awaiting the March 1 date when the main body of baterymen are due. Griffith denied the request. Each day in camp for each player sets Mr. Griffith back five bucks.

Louis Allowed To Face Baer In New York

Ring Solons to Let Colored Lad Shoot at Title, if Good Enough.

By Jack Miley.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—For the first time since Jack Johnson's victory over Jim Jeffries caused a series of race riots to sweep the country 25 years ago, a Negro challenger will be permitted to fight a white champion when Joe Louis attains the prominence of an opponent for Maxie Baer.

The sensational colored youth from Detroit will be permitted to battle Baer here when he has established himself as the No. 1 contender in his division, Gen. John J. Phelan, chairman of the New York State Athletic Commission, declared in disposing of the racial question today.

Gen. Phelan and blunt Bill Brown, the practical member of the commission, admitted that the Detroit slugger, at the rate he is traveling, should be ready for a title shot within a year. The youngster, who has been bowling over all the experienced trial horses since he turned pro last spring, will not be given the run-around in New York because of the pigmentation of his skin, Phelan ruled.

Looks Promising.

"We will approve a Louis-Baer bout when Louis shows he is of championship caliber," Phelan said. "Right now he looks like the most promising prospect in America and if he continues to improve he should be Baer's No. 1 challenger in 1936.

While the late Tiger Flowers and Kid Chocolate were champions among the smaller fighters, the only heavy who got within shouting distance of a title was Harry Wills, who might have fought Jack Dempsey if Jimmy Walker and Tammany Hall hadn't used Harry's hopes as a ballot magnet.

The eloquent author of the Walker boxing law wrested Harlem from the Republicans in 1925 by insisting that Dempsey could not get Gene Tunney or anybody else in New York until he had faced Wills. Dempsey himself was willing to face the Black Panther, whom Jack Sharkey later tamed, and Tex Rickard planned to stage the bout in Boyle's Thirty Acres, Jersey City.

But when Washington began to apply pressure against this mixed match, Rickard called all bets off and took Tunney and Dempsey to Philadelphia—thus costing New York $3,000,000 worth of gates in the brace of brawls between Gene and Jack.

The boxing commission also ruled today that the Primo Carnera-Ray Impelletierre bout on March 15 will be a 10-rounder instead of a 15-heat fracas, which the Italian wished. Lou Ambers and Sammy Fuller were within a pound of the 135-pound limit for their 15-round fight at the Garden Friday night, they notified the sock satraps.

Wheat Futures Rise on Reports Of Crop Aridity

Cotton Market Narrow With Steady Closing and Slight Changes.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—Prices of July and September wheat futures, representing new crop deliveries, advanced fractionally today as buyers responded to fresh advices, some official in character, that broad areas of the Western grain belt, where drought has depleted wheat yields for two consecutive years, still have deficient moisture reserves.

Gaining more than a cent in an early bulge, the deferred contracts later reacted when some pit longs started to unload following a weak turn in New York rail stocks, but only part of the upturn was lost.

Wheat closed unchanged to ¾ cent higher compared with yesterday's finish, May 97⅛ to ¼, and corn was ⅜ lower to ¼ up, May 84⅝ to ½. May wheat, the old crop delivery, rallied with July and September, but encountered selling pressure around 97¾. July finished at 92 to 92⅛, at ⅜ to ⅝ gain. Oats were unchanged to ¼ off, rye steady to ½ down, and barley unchanged.

The market was very narrow and easily influenced. The dip in wheat disclosed an overbought condition and lack of support, although there was no aggressive selling.

More Moisture Needed.

Government reports indicated that 21 per cent more than normal moisture is needed in the Southwest to assure average wheat yields, and chances for such an amount of precipitation were described as being about one in five. The area where sub-soil moisture reserve deficiency is greatest was described as embracing western Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska and the Dakotas and eastern portions of Montana, Wyoming and Colorado.

Early wheat strength came from these pessimistic advices plus similar news from Canada. Reports of more scattered dust storms in domestic regions were received and the prevailing cold weather, particularly where there is no snow covering, was held to be adverse to crop development. Scattered precipitation in the Southwest was reported not to have touched driest areas. Firmness in Liverpool wheat was also some incentive to buyers here.

Fresh upturns in live hog values and expectation that feeding will be increased as a result of cold weather had little effect on the corn trade. There was considerable profit-taking on moderate bulges.

The bullish hog news was the basis for moderately higher provision prices.

Abrupt Decline of Secondary and Speculative Railroad Bonds Indicate That Many Reorganizations Will Become Necessary.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Feb. 26.—Heavy offerings of second-grade and speculative railroad bonds during the past few sessions, causing declines of 10 points and more in many such issues, reflect the growing belief that systems representing upward of 100,000 miles of railroad face drastic reorganizations.

As is well known, financial institutions are heavily interested in the bonds of these railroads, and liquidation by these institutions has been a dominating factor in the market decline. The immediate cause of the present wave of liquidation of railroad obligations has been the apparent decision of Chairman Jesse H. Jones to reverse his previous stand. Mr. Jones has latterly thrown his influence with that group in the Administration that has argued right along that through reorganization railroads would have more money for maintenance and capital improvements, since they would have to expend so much less for interest and guaranteed dividend payments. The chairman of the RFC has indicated that, when railroads approach him for loans, he will be interested chiefly in helping them to reorganize.

However, aside from the new policy of the RFC, selling of railroad bonds has been stimulated by the current earnings. A number of lines show increased gross earnings but smaller net operating income for January, as a result of the wage increase and other factors which increased expenses last month. Close observers of the railroad situation estimate that even if, as the more optimistic predict, operating revenues rise by 10 per cent this year, expenses will probably be increased in proportion, especially in view of the increases in wage rates effective January 1 and April 1. The combination of unsatisfactory earnings and an unwillingness by the Government to nurse weak railroads along further opens the way for an unprecedented number of reorganizations during the next two or three years.

Several Lines Slated For Rehabilitation.

Prices of their bonds clearly indicate that the market expects reorganization of the Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific, the New York, New Haven & Hartford and a number of smaller roads. A number of other systems reporting substantial deficits after charges, such as the New York Central, the Baltimore & Ohio, the Southern Pacific and the Southern Railway, are held likely to effect at least moderate readjustments of their capital structures if no improvement in earnings should develop shortly, particularly in view of the difficulty they would encounter in refunding maturing obligations if the RFC will not lend a helping hand. The Western Pacific and Denver & Rio Grande Western are already seeking to effect a drastic reorganization by voluntary cooperation of security holders and other creditors.

The country has about 240,000 miles of class 1 railroads in all. Approximately 45,000 miles are now in equity receivership or bankruptcy. The additional mileage likely to undergo reorganization, which may aggregate 80,000 from present appearances, is so great as to indicate that corporations owning more than half the railroad mileage of the country will be subjected to drastic recapitalization.

The procedure that has been launched in the Western Pacific case indicates the course that may be adopted to effect recapitalization, at least until additional legislation has been enacted to facilitate reorganization through the courts. The plan proposes to reorganize the Western Pacific voluntarily, thus avoiding resort to the bankruptcy act. The largest issue of the company is the first mortgage 5 per cent bond issue. Holders of these bonds, including a number of financial institutions, will be asked to accept new bonds in exchange that will have a 2 per cent fixed interest coupon, with 3 per cent additional interest payable if earned and declared by the board of directors.

"Participating Bond" Attracts Investors.

This bond, of the type known as a "participating bond," is far more satisfactory to most institutional investors than preferred stock or outright income bonds. In fact, financial institutions who wish to do so may be permitted to carry these new bonds on their books in some jurisdictions without a substantial write-down, in view of the fact that a material part of the interest due remains fixed. This desire to avoid heavy write-downs of the book values of their assets plays an important role in the attitude of financial institutions toward the railroad problem in many instances.

Formerly, a wave of railroad reorganizations would have had an unsettling effect on business generally. At present, however, with the difficult plight of the railroads well known, it is probable that reorganizations, already fully or more than fully discounted in the market prices of many railroad obligations, will not have broad adverse repercussions. In fact, insofar as increased maintenance and new capital expenditures will be made possible by the reorganizations, the latter will have a stimulating effect upon industry in general, and especially on the railroad supply trades.

Railway Bonds Fall in Trading 1 to 3 Points

Offerings of Secondary Loans Unsettle Whole Market.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—Large offerings of secondary railroad loans unsettled the entire bond market today. There were numerous declines of 1 to 3 or more points in the lower-priced groups and the upward movement of prime investments, including United States Government issues, was arrested.

Indications that January income of railroads would be much smaller than expected, coupled with the unfavorable carloadings reports thus far in February, apparently was the spark that touched off the fireworks in the carrier division, which accounted for most of the activity during the late trading.

Also overhanging the market were intimations in the recent speech of Jesse Jones, chairman of the RFC, that the Government would not continue indefinitely to support weak railroads, which had called attention anew to a collection of long-standing reports and rumors that a number of financially embarrassed carriers were on the eve of being put through the "wringer" of bankruptcy proceedings and capital readjustments.

B. & O. Bonds Off.

Heaviest losers were Baltimore & Ohio refunding 6s, off 4½ points at 69½; St. Paul 4½s, off 3⅛ at 47⅞; Illinois Central collateral 4s, off 6¼ at 64; New Haven 3½, off 5⅜ at 24¼; Southern Railway 6½s, off 5 at 58, and the Consolidated 5s, off 4 at 97. A long list of loans of other roads showed losses of 1 to 2½ points.

In the prime corporate and Government division, losses were generally confined to the fractional variety. Most of the Treasury loans were 2-32ds to nearly ¼ of a point lower and indirect obligations also yielded. There was little activity in Liberties.

Minor declines occurred in obligations of the American Telephone, Chesapeake & Ohio, Union Pacific, National Dairy, Pennsylvania Railroad and Pure Oil. The Associated Press averages were from .2 of a point to 1.2 points lower.

A 3-point drop in Panama 5s to 43 followed a revival of the controversy between that government and the United States over the gold clause in obligations. There were no other important changes in the foreign section.

Transfers aggregated $13,592,000, par value, compared with $12,239,000 on Monday.

Produce Exchange Cuts Out Trades In Securities

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—The first day of trading on the New York Produce Exchange without dealings in securities closed today with satisfaction expressed by the membership on the new arrangement.

Inaugurated in 1928, trading in securities on the exchange was recognized as a financial burden by the board of managers on January 4, when it was decided to discontinue the function "on or before February 28." Only commodities now are traded in on the exchange with securities trading on the Produce Exchange recognized as "no longer an essential function of the exchange."

Gloom Follows Fall of Rails To Lowest Point Since 1933

By the United Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—Railroad shares today dropped, so far as Dow-Jones averages are concerned, to the lowest level since April 25, 1933, as more pessimism spread about the carriers.

It was unexpected and sudden. The market has been firm with selective buying. Then issues of the New York, New Haven & Hartford turned weak and brought selling from professionals and the public alike. All rail issues dropped—including the bonds—with many new lows. Tonight the picture for this group showed:

The first 17 railroads to report for January showed a decrease of 18.3 per cent from Januray, 1934, in net operating income despite an increase in gross revenue of 1.7 per cent. This picture made the railroad holders sell. And even with low prices prevailing—New York Central selling at $14.50 a share, New Haven at $3.25, Atchison at $39.37½ and Illinois Central at $10—brokers hesitated to suggest buying railroad issues.

General belief is that at least a technical rally will come to the rails with hopefulness that Supreme Court arguments on the pension act may result advantageously and expectations of favorable messages to Congress on the entire transportation picture.

Stocks—Rail shares dropped to new lows on the unconfirmed information that loadings would show another unseasonal decline during the week. Other securities were unsettled by the rail selling and reacted mildly to close with losses in virtually all sections. Activity was slightly pronounced for the session, with 946,588 shares traded.

Bonds—Large sale liquidation of secondary rail loans depressed lower priced groups from 1 to 3 points, with Federals and prime investments lagging in sympathy. January earnings reports below the expected levels accelerated late selling. Sales were up slightly to $13,592,000 for the day.

Curb—More active selling lowered prices, so that closes were off fractions to around a point. Transfers approximated 150,000 shares, against 119,000 the previous day.

Wheat—Reports of drought effects in the grain belt boosted prices in the early session, later to give up part of the gain in sympathy with sliding rail stocks on the security market. Trading was narrow and prone to overrate both good and bad news. May wheat closed at 97⅛, while May corn finished the day at 84⅝.

Cotton—Evening up of March commitments monopolized interest with slight losses predominating under liquidation. Final prices were slightly above the lows of the day. Closes were steady at 2 points lower to 1 point higher. May closed at 12.41.

Coffee—Spot was quiet. Rio No. 7 closed at 8¼, while Santos No. 4 closed at 10.

Sugar—Raw sugar was quiet with interest shown at last paid prices of 2.97, with nothing available below 3.00. Refined was unchanged in New York at 4.30 for fine granulated.

Silver—Bar silver was firmer, selling in New York one-eighth higher, to close at 55½. In London it closed at one-sixteenth higher to 25 9-16 pence (United States equivalent, 56.03 cents per ounce).

Gold—Bar gold declined 3 pence in London, to close at 142 shillings 6½ pence (United States equivalent, $34.93).

Dollar—The United States dollar was irregular in foreign exchanges. It was quoted in New York in terms of foreign currencies at $4.86⅜ to the English pound; 6.63½ cents to the French franc and 40.35 cents to the German mark.

Shoe Sales Set Six-Year Peak In Spring Trade

Factories Are Working at Capacity to Supply Demand.

Replacing the lethargy which spread over the shoe trade during the summer of 1934, when markets were disrupted by the price instability which resulted from impending dumping of hides from cattle slaughtered in the drought-stricken areas, an abrupt expansion started during the final quarter which has given an impetus to operations in all divisions that appears destined to carry both production and distribution to new peaks during 1935. Fall sales of manufacturers, according to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., were 10 to 15 per cent larger than in 1933, while with retailers gains of 15 to 25 per cent were not infrequent.

Shipments of shoe manufacturers have been steady since the first of the year, with capacity schedules general, in order to provide for commitments, which are in excess of those placed during the preceding season by approximately 20 to 25 per cent.

Most of the leading factories report orders sufficient to keep present working forces busy throughout the entire season, which may be prolonged until well after Easter this year. An indication of the return to more prosperous times is present in the definite shift to shoes of the more expensive quality, which will result in better profits for all members of the trade.

Output to Exceed 1929.

As production of shoes in 1934 was only 4,288,000 pairs under the 1929 total, conservative estimates place the output for 1935 at slightly in excess of the figures for that year, which reached 361,407,000 pairs. January production, according to preliminary figures, was 26,500,000 pairs, the highest for that month since 1929, while estimated rate of February production was at 29,350,000 pairs, exceeding all comparative totals since 1928. Although capacity schedules now rule in the majority of the leading centers, the backlog of orders is sufficient to maintain current operations until well after Easter, with the strongest upturn for the year expected in the third quarter.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London—Prices were easy on the stock exchange early today. Buying in the afternoon, however, helped gilt-edged securities, transatlantic stocks and some industrial issues to recover. Tin shares were weak with metal and gold mining stocks easy. The latter on the lower price of bar gold. The market closed steadier.

Paris—Prices on the bourse receded today under the influence of discouraging business conditions, but losses were regained in the late trading. The closing was steadier.

Berlin—Lack of orders handicapped trading on the boerse today, which was quiet. Quotations recorded slight gains toward the end of the session. The closing tone was unsettled.

D. C. Gas Co. Adds 8,000 Users in Year

Consolidated Gross Income $490,723 More Than in 1933.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

A gain of about 8,000 customers in the City of Washington during the past year was reported yesterday by the Washington Gas Light Co. in the annual statement showing net income of $986,804 for 1934.

SPERRY.

Coincident with the increase in the number of consumers, which brought total meter installations up to 143,458 at the end of the year, the company reported that sales of gas reached a total of 8,264,369 Mcf, compared with the previous year's figure of 7,641,978.

Consolidated gross income of the Washington company was $6,762,245 during 1934, compared with $6,271,522 during the year previous. The company controls among its subsidiaries the Georgetown Gas Light Co., the Georgetown Gas Light Co. of Montgomery County, Md.; the Washington Gas Light Co. of Montgomery County, Md.; the Rosslyn Gas Co., and the Prince George Gas Corporation.

Sperry Reports.

In the annual report tendered stockholders of the company yesterday by President Marcy L. Sperry, lower average temperatures prevailing during 1934 were held responsible for a great part of the increase in consumption. Increase in production costs, which were proportionately greater than the increased gross income, were laid by him to the higher costs of fuel and labor.

Reference was made to hearings before the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia on the valuation of the properties of the two companies in the District of Columbia. The public hearings were brought to a conclusion on June 28, 1934, and a brief on behalf of the companies was submitted by counsel in the latter part of August. The commission has not yet announced its findings with respect to the value of the properties.

By order of the State Corporation Commission of Virginia the value of the properties of the Rosslyn Gas Co. and substantially reduced rates effective on and after June 1, 1933, were fixed. The effectiveness of this order was suspended by an injunction issued by the United States district court. On December 22, 1934, the controversy between the Rosslyn company and the State Corporation Commission of Virginia was settled and as a result thereof the commission issued an order on December 22, 1934, rescinding its previous order valuing the properties of the Rosslyn company and prescribing a new schedule of rates.

Average Gas Rate.

The average rate received for all gas sold during 1934 was 81.4 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. The average rate for gas for domestic purposes, such as cooking and water heating, but exclusive of building heating, was 86.6 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. The gas supplied is of 600 B. t. u. heating value.

Rates charged customers during 1934 were the same as in the previous year, the 8½ per cent temporary discount having been continued throughout the year pending final determination of the value of the properties of the District of Columbia and Maryland companies.

Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, on January 9, 1935, ordered an investigation of the rates, tolls, charges, etc., of the Washington Gas Light Co. and The Georgetown Gaslight Co.

As a result of the compromise between the Rosslyn Gas Co. and the State Corporation Commission of Virginia a reduction in rates to be charged by the Rosslyn Gas Co., effective January 1, 1935 was effected.

It is estimated that the effect of this reduction will be a saving to the customers of the Rosslyn company amounting to approximately $23,000 per year. This estimate is based on the 1934 sales of gas. A further result of the compromise by which the Commission rescinded its 1933 valuation and rate reduction order was the release of the Rosslyn company from its contingent liability.

Georgetown Gas Co.

The net earnings of the Georgetown Gaslight Co. as reported in the statement appended hereto are reduced in comparison with earnings in the previous year and, in fact, show a deficit of $9,412 for the year 1934 after all charges. This company purchases its entire supply of gas from Washington Gas Light Co.

At the stockholders meeting Everett J. Boothby was elected a director to fill the vacancy created by the death of Robert D. Weaver. Other directors were reelected as follows:

Cary T. Grayson, Marcy L. Sperry, Wilton J. Lambert, Sidney F. Taliaferro, Christopher H. Pope, Corcoran Thom.

Curb Reacts; Losses Slight; Trading Active

Montgomery Ward "A," Off 2¼ for the Day, Leads Decline.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 26.—Reactionary tendencies continued to assert themselves on the Curb Exchange today, and losses of fractions to around a point predominated at the close. Activity broadened somewhat on the decline.

Montgomery Ward "A" lost 2¼ points, while issues finishing a point or more lower included Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Sherwin-Williams, Safety Car Heating and Aluminum Co. of America.

Scattered resistant spots included Swift International, Pioneer Gold, Lake Shore and American Cyanamid "B." Fractional recessions were registered by Pan-American Airways, American Gas & Electric, Electric Bond & Share, Hiram Walker, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams and Newmont.

New Taxes.

WE HAVE a sales tax in our State, a tax that's strictly up to date; it soaks the poor man every day, when he would buy a bale of hay, a codfish or a can of peas, a boonet or a slice of cheese. Whenever he would spend a buck, for extra kopecks he is stuck. And e'en the rich man, who is prone to lightly spend the shining bone, puts up some loud and horase laments when he is gouged the extra cents. It is a nuisance rank and sour, and it's protested every hour. Today the man who deals in books remarked, "Ods fishbones and gadzooks! You'd be surprised how many gents come in to spend 200 cents for some new book of which they've heard, some story tragic or absurd; they'd gladly spend the smackers twain to buy a volume safe and sane, but when reminded of the tax, I see their indignation wax. They frown and cuss where once they laughed; 'We won't dig up for such a graft; this taxing graft should soon be beached, we're sure the limit has been reached.'" We used to chortle when we read of taxes in the ages dead; the chimney tax which kept the poor in rooms too frigid to endure; the window tax, which drove the scout to keep the pleasant daylight out, board up the windows of each room, and live in everlasting gloom. There was a tax on whiskers once, imposed by some gross Roman dunce, and everyone was forced to shave if he desired to thrive and save. We're getting back to those old times, and all our rubles and our dimes so sorely needed in our shacks, must go to pay some beastly tax.

Petition Flays Milk Control In Maryland

'Arbitrary Price-Fixing' Is Charged by Montgomery Residents.

By E. F. Tingley.
A Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 26.—Determined opposition developed today from Montgomery County to the milk control bill introduced by Delegate William G. Knapp, Democrat, of Baltimore County, at a public hearing before the House Agriculture Committee.

Indorsement was given the measure by a group of producers and distributors from Frederick County, while Eastern Shore spokesmen were divided in their opinions.

Former State Senator A. G. Ensor, of Harford County, past president of the Harford County Farm Bureau and past master of the Maryland State Grange, now vice president of the Agricultural Corporation of Maryland, spoke as a milk producer in favor of the control act.

Others Voice Approval.

Others who expressed approval were Charles Wise, secretary of the Maryland Farm Bureau Federation; Philip Turner, president of the Baltimore County Farm Bureau, and Wilbur L. Smith, president of the Frederick County Farm Bureau.

H. F. Hargett, of Germantown, a milk producer operating in Montgomery County, branded the bill another example of government interference in private business and suggested tabling the measure indefinitely. He alleged ineffective operation of a similar measure in New York State and questioned whether the provisions of the act could be administered effectively.

A petition opposing the bill, signed by 13 residents of Montgomery County, was presented by Alden A. Potter, of Cabin John. It said the measure proposed "arbitrary price-fixing and communistic allotment in place of competitive prices and production, which thus deliberately subsidizes inefficiency by allotting production among all producers instead of elliminating poor producers and raising unit costs of production even in efficient plants."

Women Object to Measure.

Mrs. Ida M. Henderson and Mrs. Blanche A. Corwin, of Montgomery County, opposed the measure, declaring it would place the State in private business.

The Frederick County delegation which fully indorsed the proposed act was composed of B. B. Derrick, W. A. Burrell, M. H. Ramsburg, J. S. Daveler and E. B. Rosenstock, attorney for the Frederick County Milk Producers' Association and member of the Farmers' Cooperative Association of Frederick County.

A. R. Marvel, of Easton, Talbot County, was bitter in his denunciation of the bill which, he said, would destroy the milk business of the State by "putting it in politics." He deplored the exclusive powers of the proposed commission. He said he was in favor of letting the milk industry work out its own problems and suggested an arbitration committee of three chosen by the producers, distributors and consumers.

Bill Creates Commission.

The proposed bill creates a milk-control commission, which shall have power to regulate the production, transportation, processing, storage, distribution, delivery and sale of milk. It provides for licensing of milk dealers and the issuance of permits to producers, for which fees shall be paid.

Distributers shall be required under the act to furnish bonds or their cash equivalent to secure payments to producers and all other payments authorized by the commission. The measure authorizes the examination of the business, papers and affairs of milk dealers and producers and requires the filing of regular reports. Penalties and fines are provided.

Another hearing will be held Thursday at 2:30 p. m.

Miller to Press Bill for License Of Bookmakers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 26.—State Senator Ernest W. Miller, of Washington County, who introduced in the Legislature a bill licensing bookmaking in Hagerstown, announced that he intends to press for passage of the bill unless a bill should be introduced outlawing all gambling, from punchboards to the stock exchange.

Considerable pressure has been brought to bear upon representatives from the county in the Legislature to introduce a bill outlawing bookmaking by ministerial organizations and others, resulting in Senator Miller's announcing his position with regard to the bookmaking bill he has introduced.

The Senator said he was satisfied that bookmaking establishments existed in other cities and towns where they were illegal and that his bill was aimed at bringing in a revenue to the county. He estimated that under the provisions of his measure between $25,000 and $50,000 would be returned to the county annually. The bill provides not only for a $1,000 annual license for each main establishment and $100 for each branch, but the county would collect 1 per cent on all money wagered.

If at the end of two years, bookmaking under the license system is found to be unsatisfactory, the Senator said that he favored outlawing it.

BATTLE OF THE BULLS! SPANISH FORCES DEFENDING PANAMA AGAINST MORGAN'S PIRATES STAMPEDED 20,000 WILD CATTLE INTO THE RANKS OF THE INVADERS... THE STARVING PIRATES KILLED AND ATE SOME OF THE CATTLE... THEN WENT ON TO SACK THE CITY... 1671

One of the strangest battles the world has ever known was the battle between 20,000 wild cattle and a band of several hundred half-crazed pirates which took place outside the City of Panama in the spring of 1671. Strange as it seems, the battle with the cattle proved to be the salvation of the pirates—and the downfall of the Spaniards who stampeded the cattle into the pirate band. The pirates had had virtually no food for more than a week. They killed what cattle they wanted, ate their fill and then went on to sack Panama in one of the cruelest invasions ever recorded in bloody pirate history.

The leader of the pirates was the notorious Morgan. With his army of bandits and pirates he set out from Chagres early in 1671 for a nine-day march across the Isthmus of Panama to capture the City of Panama. Morgan took no food with him, and the Spaniards, knowing in advance that he was coming, carefully removed all food ahead of time along the line of march.

The pirates nearly starved. They finally were forced to eat leather, and if the Spaniards had not overlooked one granary full of corn which the pirates found, it is doubtful if they could have completed their march to Panama.

When they gathered outside the city preparing for the attack the defending Spanish soldiers committed their fatal blunder. They tried to defeat the pirates by stampeding 20,000 wild cattle into them. This blunder was a godsend to the starving pirates.

Rules to Speed Court Actions Put in Effect

Revised Procedure Aims to Cut Expenses of Maryland Circuit.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Salisbury, Md., Feb. 26.—New circuit court rules designed to speed procedure and reduce expenses were in effect today throughout the first judicial circuit, which comprises Wicomico, Dorchester, Somerset and Worcester Counties.

The regulations, approved by Chief Judge Benjamin A. Johnson, this city, and Associate Justices James M. Crockett, Pocomoke, and T. Sangston Insley, Cambridge, were drafted by a committee representing the bar associations of the four counties. F. Leonard Wailes, Salisbury, was chairman, and the other four members were L. Claude Bailey, Salisbury; George H. Myers, Princess Anne; William A. Price, Snow Hill, and W. Laird Henry, Cambridge.

The court had previously been operating under rules adopted November 1, 1912.

Adoption of the practice of a preliminary call of the dockets on Saturday of the second week preceding each jury term and the assignment of cases for trial were the most conspicuous changes effected. Cases not marked for trial or jury at the preliminary call cannot be changed when the term is convened.

The civil appearance and civil appeal dockets will be called first at each term. Removed cases are placed last on assignments.

Criminal dockets are to be called on the first Friday after court convenes and criminal trials start on the second Monday.

Coal Truckers in 3 States Organize for Law Reform

Charge of an Overloading Reveals Permanent Association.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 26.—It was learned here this week when Constable C. M. Wilson arrested a Romney (W. Va.) man for violation of the West Virginia laws dealing with the overloading of trucks, that coal truckers in Hardy, Hampshire and Mineral Counties, W. Va., supported by others from points in Maryland and Virginia, have formed a permanent organization for the sole purpose of having changes made in the laws.

Carl R. Conrad, the Romney man, at first insisted the State Road Commission had instructed law enforcement agencies in the State temporarily to discontinue the enforcement of the law pertaining to overloading, pending action by the Legislature in which changes were to be made in that law. Constable Wilson communicated with the commission and was advised by telegram this was in error, and no such instructions were issued. The case was docketed for March 7 before Justice C. W. Nicklin. Conrad posted bond for his appearance on that date.

Inquiry disclosed that truckers of the counties mentioned had organized and were endeavoring to have changes made in the law dealing with overloading, claiming it discriminated against coal truckers. Attorneys have been employed and sent to Charleston to have the necessary changes made, it was indicated. The truckers hope to have the present load law thrown out entirely, substituting a new bill drawn by the West Virginia Truckers Association through the aid of NRA code authority.

Virginian Charged With Killing Wife

Confession Reported in Fatal Shooting.

By the Associated Press.

Hillsville, Va., Feb. 26.—Otis Bond, 33, is in jail here charged in a warrant with murdering his wife, Tabitha, also 33, near their home a few miles east of here in the Dugspur community early today.

Coroner C. B. Nuckolls, who investigated, said he was told Bond had been drinking and abusing his wife, and she left home to go to a neighbor's for protection. Bond followed and shot her down in the road with a shotgun, the charge entering near the heart, the coroner said.

The Bonds have eight children, ranging in age from 7 months to 13 years.

Bond first telephoned to Hillsville for officers, saying "a mob" had come to his house and killed his wife. Later he admitted the killing and attempted to escape, but was arrested by F. L. Quesenberry, a citizen.

Davis Argues AAA Changes To House Unit

Chief Calls Amendments Vital Especially to Growers, Dairymen.

By the Associated Press.

The AAA amendments, 1935 model, yesterday began a bumpy journey through Congress, with proponents putting forward arguments similar to those that failed to get them through at the last session.

Chester C. Davis, farm administrator, told the House Agriculture Committee that the amendments were vital to farmers and in particular to the growers of fruits and vegetables and to dairymen.

"Those who are looking for ghosts," he said, "can always find things of which to be frightened."

The administrator, in this statement, apparently was anticipating the opposition that is sure to be heard. Although they may not have the support of Senator Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, and Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, this year, many handlers and processors of farm products are certain to oppose the amendments vigorously.

Former Foes Satisfied.

Byrd and Smith led the Senate opposition at the last Congress. Smith already has said he considered the revised amendments satisfactory and the Virginian said some of the things he most objected to have been eliminated.

Aside from new proposals affecting processing taxes and benefit payments, the amendments are designed to make certain that Secretary Wallace has the power to force handlers of farm products, through licensing, to enter and abide by marketing agreements.

The AAA lacks the power to levy a processing tax on most fruits and vegetables and consequently must handle adjustment programs affecting them through marketing agreements. Power also would be given to allow the AAA to examine the books and records of parties to the marketing agreements.

Worthless Without Licenses.

"Unless the agricultural adjustment act unquestionably provides for supporting marketing agreements with licenses," Davis said, "then the marketing agreement method of bringing farm recovery is virtually worthless and Congress might as well let the producers of the specialty crops I have indicated know that they can not expect to be included in the farm recovery plans.

"Unless a license can be used to bring a recalcitrant minority into line, marketing agreements are not more effective than any plans depending entirely upon voluntary cooperation have been in the past."

Explaining that the Secretary of Agriculture sought no authority to license individual producers, the administrator said some doubt had arisen in the courts whether Congress intended to grant the specific powers Wallace had been exercising, and the proposed licensing amendment was to make that power explicit.

Recalls Adverse Ruling.

The power to license or bind processors to obey a marketing agreement, Davis said, is especially vital to the fluid milk producers, since without this power the entire series of milk licenses now in effect might be nullified.

The proposed authority to examine books and records of parties to marketing agreements and licenses, he explained, would apply only if violation of antitrust laws was involved in the provisions.

Package Hiding 'Spoiled' Votes, Loser Charges

Dr. Llewellyn Jordan, defeated Democratic candidate for the House of Delegates, yesterday attempted to have opened a package containing what he said were "spoiled, not voted and defective ballots" at the hearing he and another defeated Democrat instituted at Rockville to gain a recount of the vote cast in the election of November 6 in Montgomery County, Maryland.

Judge Donald A. Delashmutt, who is presiding at the hearing, ordered the package, alleged to contain the "ballots," to be given into the custody of the clerk of the Circuit Court of the Sixth Judicial Circuit of Maryland. Until yesterday the "package" had been in the possession of F. Byrne Austin, clerk to the Board of Election Supervisors.

Mr. Austin was on the stand when Dr. Jordan, who was conducting the direct examination, asked about the ballots. They were taken before the court on a subpena and Dr. Jordan asked the court to have them opened and read. Edward Peter, counsel for the Fusionists, who are opposing the demand for a recount, objected and declared:

Denies Authority to Open.

"There is no authority for this court to order this package to be opened." Mr. Peter asked that the hearing be adjourned until he could petition the Circuit Court, now sitting in Frederick, for an order restraining the reading of the ballots.

Dr. Jordan was on his feet with the declaration that he was "defending the integrity of the ballot box and neither defense council nor this court has the right to refuse to let us open these packages in order to see if they contain what we all believe they contain." Dr. Jordan cited several cases of contested elections before the Maryland House of Delegates.

Judge Delashmutt then ordered the package turned over to the clerk of the Circuit Court pending a ruling.

Seeking to Oust Fushionists.

Mr. Austin's testimony, incidental to getting the package of supposed ballots into testimony, was the high spot of the day. Dr. Jordan and John J. Imirie, who also ran for the House of Delegates, are trying to unseat Joseph A. Cantrel and Walter M. Magruder, Fusionists.

It was brought out by Dr. Jordan that the "spoiled, not voted and defective ballots" should have been turned over to the clerk of the Circuit Court and, he declared, they illegally had ben in the custody of Mr. Austin since the election.

Mr. Austin read the minutes of meetings of the board of election supervisors, recording the challenging of results from precincts. He followed election officials who told of conditions in Bethesda.

Tells of Varying Tallies.

Ellis B. Harrison, a 29-year-old salesman, who acted as Republican clerk at the Fourth Precinct in the Seventh District, Bethesda, which is the battleground of the two groups, admitted from the stand he signed a tally sheet with which he did not agree—on the totals. This discrepancy, he testified, caused the board of election supervisors at Rockville to call all officials at his precinct before them and the Bethesda officials were told the sheet could not be accepted as it was. After some discussion, Mr. Harrison testified, a few votes were added to the short side of the tally and the sheets were accepted.

This was done, he said, after a man whom he believed to be a member of the board of election supervisors, told the puzzled Bethesdans that it was customary to add enough tallies to balance the sheet and never to subtract from the long sheet. He said this procedure was agreeable to all the officials from his precinct, all of whom were summoned to Rockville. No one then asked for a recount and, the witness added, he believed the discrepancy was about five votes.

Election Fair, Judge Says.

E. Windsor Offutt, 45, a real estate salesman who lives in Chevy Chase and who was a Democratic judge, said he had done 45 hours of continuous duty at the polling place and so far as he could see, the election there was as "fair and square as it could be." He testified the tired clerks sometimes tallied votes on the wrong line and, realizing their errors, corrected them by adding or dropping votes on succeeding ballots. This was the recognized and approved by judges of the two parties, he said.

The testimony of these two officials was borne out by others who had tallied and judged a record-breaking number of ballots the night of November 6 and through the succeeding day and night and another day. Throughout their testimney it was obvious one thing stood out in their minds—the weariness of the work of counting ballots.
